The Canaries, Azores, and Cape Verde Islands, with the contiguous mainland of West Africa, had been previously granted to Portugal by earlier papal decrees, with the result that large areas of West Africa, and, shortly after, South and East Africa also, were seized and administered as possessions of the Portuguese crown. Portugal still owns the islands, with Angola on the west coast of Africa and Mozambique on the east coast, in joint area about 800,000 square miles, or more than twenty times the size of Portugal. Of her once immense Asiatic empire, Portugal still owns, in India, the settlement of Goa, though she has lost Ceylon; she owns the great island of Timor, on the shoulder of Australia, and the settlement of Macao, just south of Canton. Those territories she acquired by sailing through all the regions to the east of the line of demarcation. That is, she reached South Africa, India, and other parts of Asia by sailing east.

Spain reached the same regions by sailing west. In 1520, Magellan, on behalf of Spain, sailing to South America, and through the straits which still bear his name, made his way to the Philippines, which were claimed and named for the King of Spain. In theory, the boundary between their possessions on the other side of the world was the continuation of the line of demarcation across the North Pole and down on the other side; that is, somewhere in the region which includes Timor, the Philippines, and Macao. But the exact position of this line was not certainly known, therefore there was a good deal of dispute between Spain and Portugal as to the ownership of the "Spice Islands," the Moluccas, with their treasures of spice, of pepper, cinnamon, mace, and nutmeg.

In Shakespeare's day these great Latin world empires, growing out of Pope Alexander's bull, began to be impaired. Spain's sea power was broken by the English in the defeat of the "Invincible Armada" in 1588. Then the Dutch, who had for so long been fighting heroically against the Spaniards, began to wax strong as a maritime power. In 1600 the Dutch East India Company was organized, and presently won from Portugal (at that time and until 1640 under the Spanish Crown) the whole of South Africa and Ceylon and built up a great empire in the East Indian Archipelago. During the Napoleonic wars, in virtue of England's sea power, much of the world empire of Holland passed to England; a part was restored when peace was made. But Cape Colony, Ceylon, and Singapore became permanently English. Nevertheless, the Dutch Empire in Asia still measures about 750,000 square miles. A Dutch West India Company was formed shortly after 1600, and presently conquered from Spain a rich region in South America, of which the present Dutch Guiana is only a part. Much went to England in Napoleon's time, but it is of great historic interest that Dutch law still lives both in British Guiana and Ceylon, while the Dutch element at the Cape, with Botha and Smuts at its head, is full of vitality and power.

In this way, then, did the bull of Pope Alexander shape the destinies of both hemispheres for centuries, leaving vast traces even today. The result of that decree, as it touched "the freedom of the seas," is thus summed up by Ramsey Muir in Mare Liberum: "It practically gave a monopoly of most of the world's seas to Spain and Portugal, and for a century thereafter the ships of all nations but these voyaged at their peril in the South Atlantic, Indian, and Pacific Oceans."

POOR RELIEF WORK SHOWS DISPARITY

A MARKED disparity in the proportionate amounts of money expended for the relief of destitute families in the Boroughs of Brooklyn and of Manhattan and the Bronx is brought out in the report of F. H. McLean, General Secretary of the National Society for Organizing Charity. Taking the work of the three great public charities of Manhattan and the corresponding agencies in Brooklyn, Mr. McLean shows that with 41 per cent. of the families helped Brooklyn has spent about 17½ per cent. of the total amount of money for relief.

In commenting upon this situation, Alfred T. White, President of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities, and member of the Committee on Philanthropic Education of the Charity Organization Society and of the Board of Directors of the Russell Sage Foundation, said:

"I do not, myself, feel that the relief expenditure of any of the three Manhattan organizations which Mr. McLean names is at all excessive. The amount expended in Brooklyn is, unfortunately, much too low, but it is the best we can do with the funds which are available. This result is not due to any lack of public interest in the Bureau of Charities, for we have over 8,000 contributors, but the average contribution in Brooklyn is far below that of contributors in Manhattan."

Taking up the work of the Charity Organization Society, the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, and the United Hebrew Charities in Manhattan and in Brooklyn, the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities, the Brooklyn A. I. C. P., and the United Jewish Aid Society, Mr. McLean finds the total number of families treated to be 19,081 for Manhattan and the Bronx, and 12,298 for Brooklyn. The report continues:

This is a grand total of 32,329, of which the Brooklyn total is 41 per cent. If we total the relief expenditures alone we find $107,586.74 expended in Brooklyn and $505,481.16 in Manhattan and the Bronx. With a total of 41 per cent. of the families, just about 17½ per cent. of the total relief was expended. Equal disparity exists with regard to trained service. To verify this we will take the items against the heading "Salaried Case Workers." The total for Brooklyn is $36,503, as against $134,088 for Manhattan and the Bronx—that is, the expenditures in Brooklyn are 21 per cent. of the whole, with 41 per cent. of the families. (We have reckoned in each instance the stenographers employed by the Jewish society, as no separation has been made there.)

Observing the total of families and total of case workers for the two similar societies—the New York Charity Organization and the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities—we note that the latter had only 35 workers for 8,064 families and the former at least 50 for 6,370. The ratio was, therefore, 1 to 231 families in New York and 1 to 230 families in Brooklyn. A reasonable average ratio is 1 to 150 or 175, which is far exceeded by Brooklyn.

Omitting for consideration for the moment the Jewish societies, the General Secretary of this association has no hesitation in saying that the relief and service resources of the Brooklyn field among non-Jewish families require at least an additional $125,000. This would mean as a total amount available for service and relief for approximately 11,000 families the sum of $219,872, as against $359,652 for approximately 13,000 families in Manhattan and the Bronx—that is, Brooklyn, with about 85 per cent. of the number of families which Manhattan and the Bronx has, would then expend about 61 per cent. of the Manhattan and Bronx service and relief expenditure. It will be remembered that this includes these four great societies only, not smaller ones, whose number in Manhattan is legion, with very few in Brooklyn. When one turns to the Jewish families the situation is even more one-sided.

Mr. McLean concludes this section of his report by urging increased interest among the people of Manhattan in the charitable work of the city outside Manhattan and the Bronx.

One Good Reason for Battery Care

Every year more and more cars depend on the battery for ignition.

This is one of the greatest testimonials to the Willard dependability.

It's also a big reason for preserving that dependability by proper care of the battery.

For if the spark fails there's "nothing doing."

If the starter fails, you can use the crank. If a lamp burns out you can replace it. But if the battery fails it means, "get a rope."

It's our business to help you avoid that possibility and with Willard quality and Willard Service it's easy.

Stop in and we'll put you wise.

DOES NOT SOOT UP SPARK PLUGS

TROUBLED with dirty spark plugs? Want to get rid of the trouble? Well then, use Tydol, the gasoline that vaporizes fast.

Low-grade gasoline is sluggish: it vaporizes slowly. A large percentage of it never vaporizes. It leaves a black sticky residue which adds to carbon deposits and causes inlet and exhaust valves to stick.

Tydol vaporizes fast. It burns up clean. And so it keeps cylinders, valves and spark plugs practically free from soot.

Motorists call Tydol "the new economy gasoline" because it costs no more than sluggish gasoline, yet gives more mileage.

Look for the orange and black sign of the Tydol dealer, and give Tydol a trial today.

To reduce friction and wear, use Veedol, the automobile lubricant that resists heat. Reduces sediment by 80% and increases power and gasoline mileage.

THE NEW WORLD

To the People of the United States

By Laurence Binyon

The author of this message to the American people, a well-known English poet, playwright, and art critic, visited New York in 1912. He has published several volumes of verse and essays since the Newdigate Prize at Oxford was awarded to him in 1890. During the war he has written "The Winnowing Fan," "Poems in the Shade," and "The Anvil." He is the author of "Attila," a drama produced in London in 1907. In matters of Far Eastern art, Mr. Binyon is an authority, and for many years he has been an official of the British Museum in the department of Oriental prints and drawings.

Laurence Binyon

NOW is the time of the splendor of Youth and Death,
The spirit of man grown greater than men knew.
The unbearable burden is borne, the impossible done,
Though harder's yet to do
Before this anguish end, and that be won
We seek through blinding battle, in choking breath,—
The New World, seen in vision! Land of lands,
In the midst of storms that desolate and divide,
In the horror of the breaking heart, O far-descried,
You build our courage, you hold up our hands.

Men of America, you that march today
Through roaring London, supple and lean of limb,
Glimpsed in the crowd I saw you, and in your eye
Something alert and grim,—
As knowing on what stern call you march away
To the wrestle of nations—saw your heads held high,
And, that same moment, far in a glittering beam
High over old and storied Westminster
The Stars and Stripes with England's colors clear
Sisterly twined and proud on the air astream.

Men of America, what do yon see? Is it old
Towers of fame, and grandeur time-resigned?
A frost of custom? backward-gazing thought?
Seek closer; you shall find
Miracles hour by hour in silence wrought;
Births and awakenings; dyings never-tolled;
Invisible crumble and fall of prison-bars.
O wheresoever his home, new or decayed,
Man is older than all the things he has made,
And yet the youngest spirit beneath the stars.

I see again the fabulous city arise,
Rock-cradled, white, and soaring out of the sea,
Manhattan! Queen of thronged and restless bays,
Of daring ships is she.
O lands beyond, that into the sunset gaze!
Limitless, teeming continent of surmise!
I drink again that diamond air, I thrill
To the lure of a wonder more than the wondrous past;
I see before me ages yet more vast Rising, to challenge heart and mind and will.

What sailed they out to seek, who of old came
To that bare earth and wild unhistoried coast?
Not gold, nor granaries, nay, nor a halcyon ease
For the weary and tempest-tost.
They sought the unshaken soul, possessed in peace—
What seek we now, and venture all on the aim?
In hearts of men is the undiscovered earth,
Whose hope's our compass; sweet with glorious passion
Of men's good-will; a world to forge and fashion
Worthy the things we have seen and brought to birth.

Taps of the drum! You have heard again their beat;
And the answer comes, a continent arms! Dread,
Pity, and Grief, there is no escape. The call
Is the call of the risen Dead.
Terrible year of the nations' trampling feet!
An angel has blown his trumpet over all
From the ends of the earth, from East to uttermost West,
Because of the soul of man, that shall not fail,
That will not make refusal or turn or quail,
No, nor for all calamity, stay its quest.

And here, here too, is the New World, born of pain
In destiny-spelling hours. The old world breaks
Its mold, and life runs fierce and fluid, a stream
That floods, dissolves, re-makes.
Each pregnant moment, charged to its extreme,
Quickens unending future, and all's vain
But the onward mind that dares the oncoming years
And takes their storm, a master. Life shall then
Transfigure Time with yet more marvelous men.
Hail to the sunrise! Hail to the Pioneers!

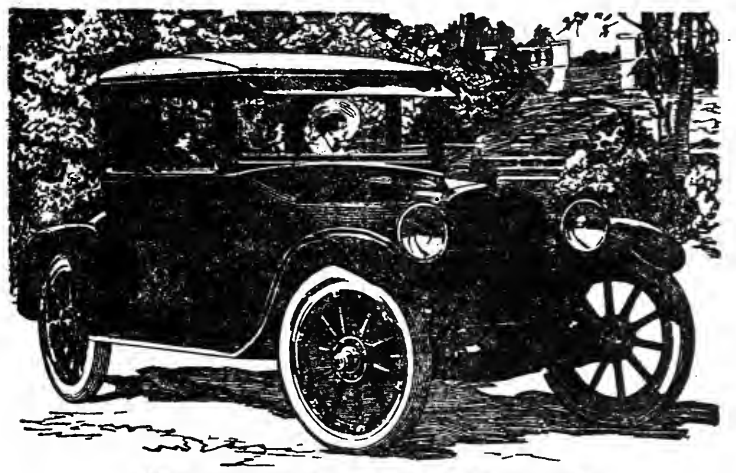
CHANDLER

CHANDLER SIX



(Illustrating the Chandler Four-Passenger Convertible Coupe)

Marking Up Prices Doesn't Make Cars Better

IF you choose your new car from among all the well-known medium-priced cars, carefully, you will choose the Chandler. You will choose the Chandler because, at $1595, it offers so much more value than any other car priced at less than $2000.

And we feel sure you will choose carefully.

You are not going to be fooled by a lot of "clever" price arguments.

* * * *

If you know the history of motor cars the past four years you know that the Chandler has always sold at a low price. You know there has never been an inflated Chandler price. And you know the Chandler price is the right price.

The Chandler price has never been fixed on a basis of what we thought we could "get" for it.

Chandler price has always been established at the lowest possible figure based on cost of production and a fair profit.

* * * *

This year we refrained from advancing the Chandler price many months after some other manufacturers had added on two or three hundred dollars. Marking up the prices didn't make them better cars. It merely made them higher-priced.

* * * *

If you will choose carefully from among well-known medium-priced cars you will choose the Chandler—for what it is and what it does.

TWO KINDS OF PACKING.

Both the Good and the Bad in Evidence in South America.

American cement deserves a high place on the honor roll of good export packing, according to Special Agent G. M. Jones, who writes from Santiago, Chile. During a tour of the west coast of South America, he reports to the Department of Commerce, hundreds of barrels of various brands of American cement were seen. With comparatively few exceptions they were in excellent condition when they arrived. Photographs taken recently at Santiago of cement shipments from both this country and Europe furnished a contrast that was very favorable to the former. The European lot is shown with the heads of several barrels broken in, while the American packing shows no defect of this kind.

There is a different story to tell in relation to the packing of export shipments of tin plate to South America, according to Consul General A. L. M. Gottschalk, who is at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and who writes in part:

"In the course of surveying damaged American cargoes to which objection had been raised here, attention was called to the manner in which certain shipments of tin plate arrived at Rio Janeiro from the United States. In two shipments which were recently examined, one consisting of 2,000 and the other of 450 cases, 600 cases were found to be damaged in the first instance and 113 in the other.

"Tin plate arrives from the United States in lots of 112 sheets, which are packed in cases of very thin wood, only slightly hooped with light iron bands. This does not provide protection against rough handling while cargo is being discharged, and often a case is broken and the sheets it contains are bent, rusted, or otherwise made unsalable. In the two instances cited the number of cases damaged was well over 25 per cent. of the total.

"The surveyor, Charles Filiberti, suggests that sufficient protection against such accidents could be avoided by running an additional band or hoop of soft iron around the centre of each case, thus preventing the boards from coming apart. It would seem safer if the cases themselves were made of a heavier, stronger wood."

Canada's Large Crops.

The estimated value of the Canadian field crop this year, according to Consul Felix S. S. Johnson, stationed in Kingston, Ontario, is over $1,000,000,000. These are the figures given by the Provincial and Government bureaus. This amount, however, does not include pasture lands, fruit returns, tobacco, clover seed, hemp and other small crops. The estimated values at current prices for some of the crops are as follows: Oats, $232,280,000; barley, $58,620,000; rye, $6,059,000; peas, $5,488,000; hay and clovers, $160,000,000; fodder corn, $10,000,000. The quality of this year's crops is said to surpass all records. Out of 717 cars of Western wheat inspected, 660 were contract grades. Millers expressed satisfaction at the new wheat brought from Western fields and declare the crop to be the "best ever."

New Jobbing House for Waco.

The Williams Dry Goods Company, a new jobbing house, will open for business in Waco, Texas, on Jan. 1. It will start in with a paid-up capital of $300,000 and the Board of Directors will consist of prominent men from different branches of business in Waco. Joseph R. Sellers, a well known merchant of Birmingham, Ala., is now in this market buying stock for the new house. Mr. Sellers will be general manager of the business and will also give his personal attention to the furnishings and notions departments.

CARE NEEDED IN MARKING.

This Is Important on Cases of Goods Exported to Chile.

While, according to Special Agent Grosvenor M. Jones of the Department of Commerce, most of the merchandise exported to Chile from this country is at least fairly well packed, the same cannot be said of the markings on the cases. Concerning this he writes, in part:

"The marking of the cases was less satisfactory than the packing. Since poor or improper marking is a violation of the customs regulations and may subject a ship to a fine and cause interminable delays in the inspection of the goods in the Custom House, it is of the utmost importance that exporters exercise care in the matter. Chilean customs regulations require that all marks be made with stencil, and not with brush or labels, and a violation of this rule subjects the ship to a fine.

"All markings should be in letters 2 to 2½ inches high. Durable paint must be used and must be carefully applied, so as to have the letters and numbers clear and distinct. It is advisable to place marks on opposite ends of the case.

"All marks should be placed fairly close together. A great deal of time is saved in many directions if the marks can be read quickly. The well-marked cases get prompter dispatch in the Custom House. A certain order should be followed in marking. First comes the consignee's mark. Just below that should come the number of the case, if the consignment consists of more than one case. Below the number of the case should be placed the port of destination. Several inches below this designation of port should be placed gross and net weights in kilos and pounds. Measurements in inches and centimeters are not required by the customs regulations. They are of value only to the steamship company, and may be put down in one corner of the case. Caution signs should be in Spanish as well as English.

"If an old case is used, which is a practice to be condemned, special care should be taken to remove completely the former markings. Special stress should be laid on the fact that, in consignments of more than one case each case should be numbered, and that this number should agree with that shown on the invoices. Unless the cases are numbered it is difficult, if not impossible, for the consignee to withdraw a case from the Custom House until the whole consignment has been received."

Wool Fabric Hats Replace Felt.

With the scarcity in furs making the felt hat situation more and more serious, not only from the standpoint of price but as to the prospects of an actual shortage as well, there is said to be a disposition on the part of a number of hatters to turn to other fabrics to fill the gap. The result is a greater number of cloth hats on the market than there has ever been before at this time of the year, and they are said to be getting a very satisfactory reception. Khaki colored duvetyn, all-over stitched in hat form, is one of the most popular of the substitutes for felts. Another feature is the tweed hat, developed more this year than formerly, along the lines of alpine felts. They also are well taken, and it is predicted that another year may find them much more generally worn.

TO EXTEND USE OF COFFEE.

Money to be Raised by Tax in Brazil for This Purpose.

A law imposing a tax of 100 reis a sack (about 2½ cents United States money) on all coffee exported has been approved by the President of Sao Paulo. According to a report from Consul Charles L. Hoover, at Sao Paulo, Brazil, the proceeds of the new tax are to be used in a campaign to increase the consumption of coffee in foreign countries, chiefly the United States. The tax is to be collected by the railroads and turned over to the Government at the end of each month.

It is estimated that about $300,000 will be raised by this means, and it is to be spent through the Promoting Society for the Defense of Coffee located in Sao Paulo. Though the society will undertake no advertising campaign on its own account, publicity agents wishing to place proposals before the association should address it direct.

LATEST GERMAN LOAN WAS UPHILL FIGHT

Hardest Problem of Campaigners Was to Keep Down Pessimism as to the Financial Future.

Every power of persuasion and pressure at the disposition of the German Government was brought into play to make a success of the seventh war loan of 15,000,000,000 marks, ($3,570,000,000 at normal exchange,) according to reports found in German newspapers recently reaching London. The time for the acceptance of subscriptions was scheduled to run thirty days from Sept. 19, but it was hinted that in case the full amount was not raised by the end of that period belated patriots would still have a chance to subscribe.

"Discourage England from continuing to fight!" was the catch phrase officially adopted by the Government for the purpose of getting subscriptions. News and advertisements of the campaign filled late papers to the exclusion of almost all other topics.

The Krupps subscribed $12,500,000, the Mendelssohn Bank in Berlin $5,000,000, and the Town of Berlin $15,000,000, making the municipality's total war loan investment $90,000,000. In general the campaign for the loan was being waged on the lines originated by the British Treasury authorities last Winter. Cabinet Ministers and Deputies addressed meetings, and the magic name of Hindenburg was used for all it was worth. Dutch newspapers contained advertisements reminding Germans resident abroad of their patriotic duty.

Poetry, music, and the promise of decorations by the Kaiser were some of the methods adopted or suggested for inducing the Germans to ransack their cupboards, stockings, and other savings banks for the new loan. One Sunday a concert was given in Berlin by the Philharmonic Orchestra, and while the spell of Wagnerian masterpieces was still upon them persuasive orators asked the audience to fill out subscription blanks.

A big feature of the propaganda for the loan was the effort to dissipate pessimism as to the financial position of Germany after the war. In the midst of the loan campaign Rudolf Havenstein, President of the Reichsbank, delivered a speech before the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce summarizing current German arguments.

Herr Havenstein candidly admitted that pessimism about the financial future was widespread. He replied to the pessimists in the first place with generalities about the enormous strength of Germany, which, he said, could never become bankrupt unless the empire were broken up. He still held out a vague hope of indemnities, but admitted that such hopes were better left out of the calculation. Germany's financial burden would be undoubtedly heavy, but she would be able to bear it, he said. The whole economic machinery of the world would move faster after the war, and the Germans would have to work still harder, think still more, and live more modestly. They would also have to take good care to turn capital into the most profitable channels. But the main point was that, "when peace had opened a free road for German work both at home and overseas, and when the German merchant was again able to wrestle in free competition with other nations in the world market," nothing could permanently paralyze German work, which was "inimitable."

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Stocks opened unchanged to 2 points higher on the Consolidated Stock Exchange and the early tone was firm. For the first few minutes buying was rather vigorous. The railroads were heavy. In the closing hour, after a slight reaction in the principal stocks, few of which were carried down to the day's earlier lows, a brisk demand appeared for the steel and other industrials. Supplies were scant and the market advanced easily.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

The movement of wheat during the last week shows a falling off of about 700,000 bushels from the previous week. This was accounted for in part by the fact that farmers are busy husking corn. At the same time there were very few complaints of scarcity of wheat at the mills, and it is becoming more evident that wheat is finding its way to the mills this year in great quantities without appearing at the statistical points, which gives the impression that wheat is moving slower than is actually the case.

RYE.—Market easier. No. 2 Western, $1.83¼, cost and freight, New York.

CORN.

The corn market was very inactive, with narrow price changes. Offers of new cash corn from the country were slightly larger and the cash market was relatively easy at some Western points. It seemed to be the general impression in the cash trade, however, that there is little probability of much accumulation until after the turn of the new year. The local cash market was strong, new yellow selling at $2.06⅞, cost and freight, New York, ten days' shipment, and Argentine corn at $2.05, free on board cars, New York, to arrive.

May	1.15⅞	1.15¼	1.15⅝	1.15½	..

OATS.

Exporters have apparently withdrawn from the oats market for the time being and in consequence an easier tone prevailed on Saturday, final prices being ⅜ to ¾c net lower. The cash position at large, however, was not of a character to encourage expectations of any material decline. Receipts were moderate and there was comparatively little pressure from the country despite the fact that holdings on the farms are conceded to be very large. The local cash market was steady; standard quoted at 73½ to 74c; No. 2 white, 74½c; No. 3 white, 73 to 73½c; No. 4 white, 72½ to 73c; fancy clipped white, 74½ to 76c; ordinary clipped white, 74 to 75c, all elevator.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The market for cottonseed oil was inactive, with sales of only 900 barrels. The undertone was easy, owing to the action of lard and underselling of November against tenders of 1,500 barrels. The cash position, however, was firm, and there was a very strong undertone to most of the competing oils and greases. Range of prices:

PROVISIONS.

The provision market was quiet and prices were easier under scattered selling credited to packing interests and owing to liquidation as a result of the Government's attitude toward high prices. At the same time the cash situation was firm and the statistical position bullish. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 10,000, estimated for Monday 43,000, and for next week 175,000; Kansas City received 2,500 and Omaha 4,000 hogs.

COFFEE.

Reports of an easier tendency in Brazil were followed by a renewal of liquidation in the coffee market on Saturday, and prices made new low ground for the movement. May contracts sold off to 7.26 or 17 points net lower, and the market closed at a net decline of 16 to 18 points. Further liquidation of December resulted in exchanges of December for May at 44 points and for September at 77 points. The local spot market was quiet and unchanged at 7⅜ for Rio 7s. BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 2,554 packages. The shortage of fancy fresh creamery was very acute today, and many buyers were unable to supply their wants. The outside trade was particularly urgent, and high bids were made in hope of drawing goods out of the regular channels. Quotations for extras and high scoring lots were advanced about ¼c. The medium qualities are moving a little better and also showing a little improvement. Renovated still dull. Ladles higher. Packing stock quiet. Creamery, higher than extras, per lb, 45½@46½c; extras, (92 score,) 45@45½c; firsts, (88 to 91 score,) 42@44½c; seconds, (83 to 87 score,) 40@41½c; thirds, 38@39c; creamery, unsalted, higher than extras, 46¾@47¼c; extras, 45¾@46¼c; firsts, 43@45c; seconds, 41@42½c; creamery, held, higher than extras, 43@43½c; extras, 42@42¾c; firsts, 40¾@42c; seconds, 39½@40½c; thirds, 38@39c; State, dairy, tubs, finest, 43½@44½c; good to prime, 40½@43c; common to fair, 35@40c; renovated, extra, 41c; firsts, 39½@40c; lower grades, 35@38c; ladles, current make, firsts, 33¼@34c; seconds, 32½@33c; lower grades, 31½@32c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 33c; No. 2, 32c; lower grades, 30@30½c.

EGGS.—Receipts today, 3,721 cases, not including 1,000 cases in transit for export. The highest qualities of fresh gathered eggs are scarce and meeting demand sufficient to absorb the offerings promptly at firm prices. Average prime qualities are quiet and offerings are rather more than ample. Undergrades irregular, and values still show a very wide range. Storage eggs unsettled and generally weak. There is hardly enough important business doing to clearly establish values, and any pressure to force goods on the market would require further concessions. Nearby eggs in light supply. Fancy new laid qualities scarce and firm; mixed and lower grades irregular, and prices show about the same wide range as recently quoted. Fresh gathered extras, per dozen, 54@55c; extra firsts, 52@53c; firsts, 48@51c; seconds, 42@46c; thirds and poorer, 35@40c; fresh gathered dirties, No. 1, 34@35c; No. 2 and poorer, 28@33c; fresh gathered checks, good to choice, dry, 32@33c; under grades, 25@31c; refrigerator, special marks, fancy, storage and insurance paid, 34@35c; firsts, storage and insurance paid, 32¼@33½c; seconds, storage and insurance paid, 30@32c; lower grades, storage and insurance paid, 28@30c; refrigerator, nearby whites, 39@44c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western hennery whites, fine to fancy, 75@80c; ordinary to good, 60@72c; gathered whites, ordinary to fine, 58@75c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby whites, pullets, 52@60c; Western and Southern, gathered whites, 52@65c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery browns, 55@61c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 46@55c.

AN ENGINE YOU'LL NEVER FORGET

The great Chalmers engine, now featuring the current Chalmers car, arrived at a rare time in history.

With war on, and gasoline in use now as never before, there has been one result evident probably to most every man that drives a car—the rapid decline in the grade of gasoline.

Engineers never expect to see a high-grade gas again.

In the face of this condition now comes the great Chalmers engine, which makes high power out of low-grade gas.

It makes "one drop of gas now do the work of two."

It makes gasoline work as gasoline has never worked in an automobile engine before.

By means of an ingenious device known as a "hot spot," the gas, after leaving the carburetor, is warmed up (but not overheated) just before it enters the intake manifold.

Then by means of another ingenious device known as a "ram's-horn" manifold, it is skillfully passed on to the engine combustion chamber.

The secret here is in what are known as "easy air bends."

The result is that at the time when the gas is touched off by the spark plug it is "cracked up" into a perfect vapor for 100% results.

This device in particular is one of the most notable achievements in automobile engineering in many years.

Not only do these improvements on the engine create more power out of less gas, but they also make possible a quick starting engine on a cold day.

When you step on the starter button in a current Chalmers, you get results right off. And your engine begins to run with midsummer smoothness—no missing cylinders—no spitting—no hesitating—no backfire.

So noteworthy is this great Chalmers engine that one is tempted to overlook other notable improvements and perfections in the current Chalmers.

They are numberless, and once evident to the eye of a wise buyer, they win him.

To miss seeing the current Chalmers at our showrooms is to miss the most recent and most talked-of car of the day.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Firm in a Quiet Session—Liberty Loan Payment and the Banks.

No more interest was manifested in yesterday's narrow and rather quiet stock market, where transactions in the two hours were but 157,000 shares, with less than 20,000 in the most active issues on the board. The professional floor traders are still keeping out of the market, so far with apparently beneficial results. Yesterday's list showed a stronger tendency with particular strength in the shipping stocks. The railroads were irregular. The suggestion made by F. A. Vanderlip looking to the establishment of closer relations between the Government and owners of railway securities was based on an analysis of the existing difficulties of financing the carriers which gave no encouragement to the holders of securities.

Mr. Vanderlip's tentative proposal that the country be divided into eight or twelve districts has been made before and has many advantages to commend it. The commission cannot adequately supervise the operation of 250,000 miles of railroad, covering the entire United States, with such widely differing problems arising in different localities. He emphasized a view which the market has been discounting for some months past when he said that the proposed increase in rates, if granted as a whole, will not effect a cure for existing evils. It is because financial men do not expect more than temporary relief from even a substantial increase in rates that railroad stocks have not recovered any considerable part of their losses, as it has become more and more evident that the commission is favorably disposed toward the pending application. The trouble with the railroad situation is too deep-seated to be repaired by the addition of even 15 per cent. to existing rates. It is almost impossible to find an important commodity that has not advanced much more than that in price in the last two years. It is not enough that a railroad should earn its operating charges, its interest and taxes and a surplus of perhaps 6 per cent. on its capital stock. If it is not able to make liberal appropriations for improvements that are not written into the capital account its credit must deteriorate. The old theory of some of the best transportation men that a dollar out of earnings should be put into the property for every dollar paid in dividends, has never been accepted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, or by the shippers' representatives at rate hearings. Time has shown, nevertheless, that no railroad can borrow all the money it spends upon improvements and continue to enjoy good credit, for the simple reason that a considerable part of a railroad's expenditures go into unproductive construction, such as elimination of grade crossings and installation of safety devices.

The smoothness with which the Federal Reserve system's part in handling the 18 per cent. installment on the Liberty 4s was worked out is clearly shown in the weekly bank statement. Notwithstanding the payment of nearly $700,000,000 in this district, the excess reserves for the week remained practically untouched, with an increase of $223,000,000 in loans and a decrease of $137,000,000 in net deposits. The small increase in loans—small in relation to the size of the payment, but nevertheless the largest on record—is accounted for by the fact that the banks held $300,000,000 of Treasury certificates which fell due at the time of payment. Incidentally, the bonds dropped to a new low record yesterday, selling at 98.10, but recovering at the close to 98.34. The 3½s are widening the gap separating the two issues and are now selling close to their offering price.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

The Status of Liquidation.

The quiet markets of the final three days last week presented so marked a contrast to the preceding week that many persons were inclined to wonder whether liquidation had run its course. The effort of the Stock Exchange to check short selling would have little effect on the speculators or investors with long stock which they wished to dispose of. What effect there was on this class would be sentimental; that is, the unsteady or weak tendency of prices resultant from short selling might influence nervous stockholders to sell, and the stability of quotations when short selling was light might encourage them to put off sales until later. The fact was evident, however, that stocks were not pressed for sale on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. At times certain issues displayed strong bulges when moderate bidding found few offerings.

Time to Rest and Think.

Many people besides the Exchange Governors would like to see a period of light trading in stocks. The belief is held in numerous quarters that, because of realization of the war burden and the great decline which has occurred in securities, a breathing spell would be excellent as a tonic to the public, a restorative of confidence. Moderate business until the Interstate Commerce Commission decides the freight rate case would be pleasing to owners of railroad securities. A trader must be pessimistic, indeed, to hold the position that there are no influences anywhere which could be interpreted favorably to stock prices. Time is wanted for the establishment of a new perspective, numerous foresighted men of the Street believe.

Country Banks Delay Report.

If the country bankers had followed instructions and attended to their business promptly the Bond Issue Division of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York would have been able to close its books on Thursday night with a complete accounting of all Liberty Loan payments. But some of these bankers have been dilatory in sending their remittances and have failed to observe the detailed instructions sent them in respect to the forms that had to be filled out. As a result, the Federal Reserve Bank will be unable to make a final report of Liberty Loan transactions for some days to some. The letters sent out by the bank were clear and the forms the banks were asked to fill out were simple, yet scores of institutions attended to the payments in their own way. Some failed to send explanatory letters in regard to advices transmitted to their correspondents, with the result that the Reserve Bank officials are at work puzzling out many problems in their endeavor to piece together the payments that have been received. "Why is it," it is asked, "that country bankers cannot follow instructions and why do they not understand that Nov. 15 means the 15th and not the 16th or 17th?" Will some one furnish the Reserve Bank with an explanation?

Security Holders, "Be Courageous."

The Superintendent of Banks of the State of Ohio, Philip C. Berg, has addressed a letter to all banks under his jurisdiction advising them that the department would not require the charging off of the depreciation in bonds and other high grade securities at this time. He says that it is not believed that the present low levels will continue and remarks: "The advice of this department to holders of high grade American securities is to be courageous and back up their unlimited faith in America's future by holding them until the purchasing power of the market is restored." Mr. Berg adds, however, that "bankers must always be conservative, and reserves should be maintained to provide against unforeseen exigencies."

Express Companies' Troubles.

An interesting side light upon the appeal of the express companies for increased rates is obtainable from the price of Adams Express stock. It has long been an inactive security, representing solid and conservative investment. The last recorded sale on the New York Exchange, last April, took place at 110. But although no sales have been recorded since, the present quotation is, bid, 63; asked, 80. It is understood that the express companies have suffered, if anything, even more heavily than the railroads from the loss of skilled labor, enlisted or drafted, and still more heavily drawn away by the lure of high wages in war industries, while they suffer, like the railroads, from steadily mounting costs and fixed rates of income.

The British Shipbuilding Program.

Reports of the progress of the British standardized freight steamship program are no more all optimistic than are the reports of the progress made by the Emergency Fleet Corporation on our own program. The London Times reports in a recent issue that although eighteen of these ships were expected to be in service in the near future, only five of them had so far actually been completed—and of these five, one had already been sunk by the Germans. There are hints in the financial news of The London Times that the British building program has suffered from one difficulty which has not hampered the American, in the shape of jealousy of the Government yards and program on the part of private shipping and shipbuilding interests.

Liners Against Tramps.

Another point which is being keenly debated in British financial shipping circles is the balance between "liner" tonnage and "tramp" tonnage in new construction. The Liverpool Steamship Owners' Association recently issued a long manifesto on behalf of the need of more liners, apparently considering that in the hurry to get tonnage of any or all descriptions, both in the United States and in Great Britain, the need of large, fast ships for carrying both passengers and light, bulky freight was being overlooked. The manifesto points out that ships of this class have been immensely valuable in the war, as auxiliary cruisers and patrol vessels, troop transports, hospital ships, &c., and that losses among them also had been heavy; that they would be as much needed after the war as before it, but no measures to replace them had been taken.

Seaboard Air Line Earnings.

The annual report of the Seaboard Air Line Railway for the year ended Dec. 31, 1916, shows an increase in net profits of $1,057,209. The total net profit for the year was $1,612,011, the gross receipts being $26,184,487, an increase of $3,548,611. The percentage of gross revenue taken for operating expenses was 65.96, against 68.44 for the previous year.

INVESTMENT.

An export company now doing a large and very profitable business, with offices in many countries, is increasing its capital stock. The money received therefor is to be used to take care of its increasing business which is growing beyond all expectations.

In offering this stock to the general public we feel that we are extending an opportunity which is seldom offered to anyone not in close touch with financial circles. It is a chance to become associated in business with the highest possible class of New York financial and business men, as our stockholders comprise leading banking and commercial interests. Our present stockholders would take up all of the new issue, but we have good reasons for wishing to scatter it. There are no insiders and no ground floor. Every share of preferred stock goes at the same price with the same bonus of common.

We will give every opportunity for the fullest investigation as to condition, standing, personnel, etc. The new issue of stock is not large and we prefer small investors with a minimum of one thousand dollars—with one exception. We can utilize the services in an official capacity of a man who will invest, say twenty thousand dollars. He must be an experienced, high-grade business man who can furnish, as he will receive, the highest possible references as to integrity, character and standing.

We tender an investment with practically certain good returns, probably very large ones, and no chances taken except the ordinary everyday ones of legitimate business. Address:—

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Larger Companies Report Deficits for Quarter Ended Sept. 30.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—Ray Consolidated, Utah Copper, and Chino all report deficits for the quarter ended Sept. 30, due, it is explained, to the price at which unsold copper is carried on the books. Chino is the only one of these companies to report a larger production than in the previous quarter.

Granby Consolidated turned out 3,155,231 pounds of copper in October, against 3,821,754 pounds in September and 4,346,099 pounds in August.

A rich core has been taken from the third drill hole at the Bear Lake Development property at Calumet, Mich., showing ten feet of conglomerate lode heavy with mineral the entire distance. Copper was cut at a depth of thirty-eight feet.

The Anaconda at present has eighteen mines working day shifts, all of which are big producers except the High Ore.

INCREASE IN LOANS MAKES NEW RECORD

Clearing House Bank Statement Shows $223,000,000 Gain Due to Bond Payments.

DEPOSITS OFF $134,000,000

Volume of Government Deposits Increases $392,000,000, to $952,000,000.

In view of the Liberty Loan payments made during the week more than the usual attention was directed to yesterday's Clearing House bank statement. It reported an increase of nearly $223,000,000 in loans—the largest on record—and a decrease of $134,000,000 in deposits. At the same time the volume of Government deposits, against which no reserves need be carried, increased $392,000,000, to $952,000,000, the same being due to the arrangement of paying for Liberty bonds by credits on the books of banks qualified as depositaries. The remarkable thing about the bank statement was that it showed only a negligible decrease of $370,000 in excess reserves.

The expansion in loans is accounted by the fact that subscribers to the Liberty Loan borrowed money to finance their payments. Borrowing for this purpose has been far more extensive than for the first Liberty Loan, owing to the campaign conducted by the banks in which they appealed to the public to borrow so that they might buy Government bonds. Although the increase in loans was $223,000,000, the actual increase was considerably more by reason of the fact that the loan account had been reduced by heavy liquidation of Treasury certificates of indebtedness. These certificates have been carried by the banks as loans, and on Nov. 15 an issue of $300,000,000 matured and an additional amount of certificates not yet due were turned in in payment of the bonds. About $150,000,000 were presented for redemption.

The decrease in deposits was due to the withdrawal of funds by bond subscribers who reduced their balances in consequence of payments made to the Government. The increase in Government deposits more than offset the decrease in general deposits. If the banks were required to maintain reserves against Government deposits the bank statement, instead of showing $109,000,000 in surplus reserves, would report a deficit of $14,500,000.

The weekly report of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York showed a $14,000,000 decrease in gold reserves, despite an increase of $3,000,000 in member and nonmember deposits. Rediscounts and advances made by the bank showed a falling off of $75,666,000, while purchases of acceptances increased about $7,000,000. The bank's investments in obligations of the United States Government increased approximately $150,000,000, which presumably indicates that the Reserve Bank acquired that amount of certificates of indebtedness in the course of the week in connection with the Liberty Loan financing. The note expansion was about normal, the increase being $7,000,000, with the total amount of notes outstanding $349,524,715.

4 per cents. opened at 98.60 and declined to 98.10, a new low record, closing at 98.34, a loss of .42 for the day. Sales in both issues aggregated $1,177,000.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York announced that beginning tomorrow all holders of 3½ per cent. interim certificates and bonds of the first Liberty Loan of 1917 desiring to convert them into 4 per cent. bonds should present such bonds or certificates at the Bond Exchange Department, 120 Broadway, Room 547, instead of at 50 Wall Street, as heretofore. No further conversions will be made at 50 Wall Street.

All holders of receipts for bonds and interim certificates already deposited for conversion should present such receipts at the room mentioned on and after December 5, 1917. No conversion 4 per cent. bonds will be ready for delivery until that date.

LOAN PAYMENTS NOW REACH $835,000,000

More Than 60 Per Cent. of Bonds Subscribed for in This District Fully Paid.

It appears that more than 60 per cent. of the Liberty Loan bonds subscribed for in this district have been fully paid. Final figures for payments are not available for the reason that some of the smaller banks up-State have not sent in their returns, but in round figures the receipts to date amount to $835,000,000, including the sale of cash bonds and the 2 per cent. payment which accompanied the loan application. This district's allotment is $1,163,475,200, and only about $325,000,000 is still due on the bonds.

The distribution of the new 4 per cent. bonds began yesterday, and tomorrow deliveries will be made to messengers of New York city banks. All day yesterday the clerks in the Bond Issue Division of the bank made ready packages of bonds which were mailed to out-of-town institutions.

On the Stock Exchange yesterday the 3½ per cent. Liberty Loan bonds opened at 99, which was the low for the day, and sold up to 99.58, the high figure, which was also the closing quotation. The net gain was .58. The ROADS HIT BY SPEED LIMIT.

Illinois Central Official Points to Loss of Efficiency.

Another hitherto ignored obstacle in the way of the development of the fullest efficiency of the railroads in carrying their present enormous freight traffic has been pointed out by Vice President T. J. Foley of the Illinois Central, in a letter to trainmen and engineers of that road. This is the loss of time due to speed restrictions, which are often imposed within the limits of small cities and towns by municipal ordinance, and which in the aggregate, in thickly settled territory, add considerably to the time of transit of freight.

"On the Illinois Central system there are 480 speed restrictions," says the letter, which is printed in the railroad magazine. "These restrictions, in many instances unreasonable in the extreme, constitute an enormous burden on interstate commerce. The loss of time resulting from complying with unreasonable speed restrictions on the system is equivalent to a day's work for 49,883 men each year. Complying with these restrictions means the waste of 361,533 tons of coal per year, of the value of $753,030 at present prices. It means the waste of 10,021 locomotive days in each year, and there is an unprecedented shortage in locomotive power. It means the waste of 248,522 freight cars for one day in each year.

"Assuming that speed restrictions throughout the United States average the same per 1,000 miles of track as they do on the Illinois Central, complying with these speed restriction laws means the loss to the country of one day's work for 2,203,210 men each year. It means the loss of 15,967,840 tons of coal, of the value of $33,479,570 (nearly one-third the present total coal shortage estimated by Fuel Administrator Garfield). If these unreasonable speed restrictions were abolished the railroads of the country could haul 4,373,952 additional freight cars, or 75,023,520 additional tons of freight, a distance of 100 miles in the course of a year."

THE COTTON MARKET

Strong Upward Swing Regains Ground Recently Lost—Prices Advance 25 to 41 Points.

Yesterday's short session on the cotton market was marked by another strong upward swing, apparently another step toward equilibrium in the process of adjustment to heavy increases in consumption combined with an extremely short crop, which has been going on during most of the week. The result was to bring the market back over most of the ground lost on Friday, with the week's close firm, the day's net advance being from 25 to 41 points for the active months. January, still the market leader, was much more active than any other month, selling up 27.50 and closing at 27.48.

The market opened strong, prices on the first call being up nearly as high as the total gain finally recorded for the session, but there was some nervousness and irregularity, although fluctuations were fairly well confined. A reassuring message from President Schutt of the Cotton Exchange, denying reports that he was in Washington to confer regarding price restrictions, and stating that the collection of the war tax was the only point at issue, helped to steady the market.

Ocean freight rates continued to be discussed somewhat, it being reported that Southern shippers complain of discrimination in the British Government rates, which are $5 per hundred from New York and $8.25 from Southern ports. An adjustment is expected, probably applying uniformly, under British and American joint action, to all tonnage.

The British restrictions on manufacture in the Lancashire mills go into effect Monday, amounting to a cut of 40 per cent. in consumption, which is now expected to run but 45,000 bales a week.

Yesterday's quotations follow:

RICE CROP OF JAPAN.

That of This Year Is Considerably Above the Average.

The first official forecast of Japan's rice crop, according to Vice Consul Hitchcock at Yokohama, gives the total for this year as 296,883,295 bushels. This exceeds last year's crop of 292,215,235 bushels by 4,668,060 bushels. The average annual crop is 365,121,340 bushels, which is 31,761,955 bushels less than the estimated crop for this year. The figures for the average annual crop are based upon the statistics for the preceding seven years. Those of the year of the best crop and of the year of the worst crop in the period are rejected; and the average of the five other years constitutes the official "average annual crop."

The reports from every part of Japan are uniformly good, as the weather this year was exceptionally favorable at the critical times of sowing, transplanting and flowering, although a certain amount of damage must have been caused by the typhoon of Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

It is the business of Dow, Jones & Co. and of The Wall Street Journal to present all the facts and factors that finally determine investment values.

It is the business of the investment and speculative markets to make the prices. Quotations at times represent premiums on values, and at other times the same values are quoted and sold far below their investment worth.

The wise investor makes thorough study of asset values and then closely follows the financial currents that so often run counter to asset values.

Then after due consideration, he salvages values from the speculative currents.

And all the time he studies values and the factors that make and unmake values.

The great investment interests of the United States daily study the columns of The Wall Street Journal.

Investment interests in this country are steadily broadening. Shareholders and bondholders are increasing and The Wall Street Journal circulation is greater than ever and steadily gaining. No man of affairs can afford to be other than a daily reader of

United States Steel

How far below asset values are the market quotations for the common stock?

Earning prospects under new prices established by the Government.

Actual additions to assets compared with present market value of common stock.

Will steel orders show an increase on a basis of Government steel prices?

This is the first of a number of analytical articles on United States Steel, the indepenent steel companies and the steel industry in general, that will appear from time to time in The Wall Street Journal, News Bulletins and ticker service of Dow, Jones & Co.

In these times of war uncertainties and sudden and vital changes in conditions, every shareholder of a steel company should keep posted.

Dow, Jones & Co.'s News Bulletins of November 19th will contain a timely article on United States Steel. Publication will also be made in the evening and following morning editions of The Wall Street Journal.

It should be read by every investor.

The Dow-Jones Bulletins will be found in all well equipped financial offices.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

THE MERCHANT'S POINT OF VIEW

In industrial matters it is apparent, to use a simile borrowed from the prizering, that the country is endeavoring to get down to fighting weight. The dropping of superfluities is one of the steps in this direction. But just at this point comes in a hesitation that is natural. In the case of a boxer preparing for an encounter it is not considered wise to train down "too fine," as it is called, and get rid of all the flesh possible. This holds good with regard to the country when it comes to determining what things are essential and what are not. Although, off hand, it would seem an easy matter to decide which industries are needed to help win the war and which are superfluous or a positive drawback, it ceases to be so simple a task when all the circumstances are taken into account. When the Council of National Defense announced its purpose of curtailing or suppressing non-essential industries, business men began to get apprehensive, and formal objections were soon interposed. From the Chamber of Commerce of the United States came a report of a special committee, which considered the subject mainly from its effects on foreign trade and exchange, and this alone showed the need of great caution. It was conceded that the first question was that of transportation, and that all foreign trade must be made subsidiary to the absolute necessity of supplying men, food, and war supplies to Europe.

Foreign Trade and Exchange.

But when ships go one way loaded should they come back empty or in ballast? Again, it is absolutely necessary that vast quantities of raw materials be imported if for no other purpose than to enable the factories here to make them up into munitions and other articles needed by the military and naval forces as well as in civilian life. Rubber, copper, iron ore, nitrates, tungsten, wool, coffee, sugar, tea, and oils are only a few of such articles. These things bought abroad run in value up to about $2,000,000,000 a year. They must be paid for either in money or in goods. If paid in money it would mean the speedy exhaustion of the gold and silver supply of the country, with its dire financial consequences. Such a calamity would more than offset many victories in the field and might, indeed, prevent such victories being obtained. So it becomes necessary to export to foreign countries what goods are needed there in order to pay the part or whole of the amounts due for purchases there. This is especially the case now, when it is no longer possible to pay Asiatic or South American or South African countries by credits on Great Britain or other European nations. Furthermore, in making payment in goods to countries from which we obtain supplies we can only do so in goods of the kind which the people of those countries wish to buy. Now, supposing that in Argentina, for example, the people want to buy from us pianos, or expensive automobiles, or silk stockings, perfumery or candy. Must we not, in order to supply them, keep going the industries which make these articles, even though they may be rightly considered nonessential from the domestic standpoint?

Looking Toward the Future.

Considerations such as these and what is implied by them serve to show the need of caution and great deliberation in taking action in the matter, and render it doubtful if any hard and fast lines will be drawn as to industries or practices except such as are beyond question retardents to the successful prosecution of the war. It must be considered also that the war is not to last forever, and that after it is ended it will be necessary for this country to have foreign outlets for its superfluous production of manufactured goods and even for some of its raw material, such as cotton, grain, oil, coal, and the like. The absence of German competition in a number of foreign countries has given American manufacturers the greatest opportunities to make a market in them for the domestic products. This is an added reason why no unnecessary check should be put on exports. For this and other reasons the Chamber of Commerce of the United States urged that "the normal business structure should be maintained as far as possible, and no nonessential industry closed down, so that some organizations may be retained for speedy development after the close of the war." It is gratifying to learn that a special bureau is to be established to investigate and render decision in matters of this kind.

Animal Imports Can Wait.

It becomes evident from time to time that much remains to be done to bring about the efficiency which the war needs call for. Sometimes it looks as though a sense of proportion were wanting and at other times as if there was a lack of co-ordination. Thus, when a sugar famine seemed imminent, the candy stores were running full tilt. Again, when attempts were made to restrict imports as well as exports with a view to using shipping only for essentials, all sorts of odd things appeared on the manifests of vessels which could by no stretch of fancy be considered as necessities. It was only a few days ago, for example, when the arrival at "an Atlantic port" was announced of a vessel from the Far East. Considering the ports from which it came, it could have been the vehicle for shipments of sugar, furs, and wool, all articles of which this country cannot get too much. What the boat actually carried, however, was a cargo of miscellaneous animals destined, apparently, for zoological exhibitions. The fauna have, very likely, an educational value, but it would seem as though their shipment hither might have been postponed to some time in the future, to the manifest advantage of the country in general.

Object Is Good, but Reason Bad.

It is a tradition that when, of old, men were sent out from Great Britain to serve as Judges in British colonies they were cautioned not to give the reasons for the decisions they rendered. The why of this was very simple. The men sent had good common sense and were honest, and were, therefore, apt to decide in accordance with justice. But, not being well versed in the law, if they attempted to give the reasons for their decisions they would be easily shown to be wrong and might have to be reversed. The instance is brought to mind now in connection with a circular letter on "Voluntary Co-operation" just issued by a certain national bank. This urges the need of labor increasing its industrial production so that more men may be released for food production—an eminently patriotic and worthy appeal. But in support of its contention the bank appends a lot of statistics which hardly help its cause. These show, for example, that the wheat crop this year was 88,000,000 bushels less than in 1901, that there are 15,000,000 fewer sheep than fourteen years ago, that there are 8,500,000 fewer head of beef cattle than in 1909, and that there has been a decline within a year of 5,400,000 in the number of hogs. A certain ingenuity, worthy of the high tariff advocates, is shown in the selection of the dates to compare with. Thus, the wheat crop in 1901 happened to be the biggest ever up to that date, and was never approached until 1913, and, although the number of sheep is less than in 1903, it is very much larger than in 1905. Again, while the number of beef cattle is less than in 1909, it is greater than in any year since 1910, and the number of hogs has been showing an increase for years. But the question is, despite all this, what bearing have the figures on the labor question? Would any adjustment of labor have changed the climatic conditions on which the crops so largely depend, or would it have caused farmers and stock raisers to enlarge the production of things which it did not pay them to raise?

Situation as to Cotton.

Cotton quotations continue to rule high, especially for spots. This was said to be largely due to the Government report showing the amount of cotton consumed in domestic mills during the last month, it being about 45,000 bales in excess of that in the corresponding month in 1916. Over a million more spindles were active last month than in October of last year, despite the reports of supposed great lack of labor in the mills. The exports, however, in the three months of the present cotton year are about 315,000 bales below those of the corresponding period last year. Hopes are expressed that some of this deficit may be made up before long, now that the submarine menace has become less. Prices for staple cotton have been especially high. They do not seem to have been affected by the stories that less of this kind of cotton will be used in tire fabrics in consequence of the restriction of the output of pleasure automobiles. In the goods market there were advances in the prices of printcloths and other fabrics, and great firmness is shown. The demands of the Fall River mill workers for another 15 per cent. advance in wages is at present one of the disturbing features of the trade. There has been comparatively little demand for the finer constructions, and looms have been changed in some instances from fancies to plain cloths. In knit goods the opening of a prominent Southern mill of its offerings for the next heavyweight season attracted some attention. The prices show considerable advance over those of last season, but the demand is so great that the price change will not affect the sales. In cotton hosiery offerings go no further than next Spring.

Wool Supplies and Fabrics.

Announcement was made the other day of the arrival in this country of the wool from Australia which is to be put up at auction in Boston next month. As to the 225,000 bales which Great Britain has released for shipment to this country, the shipping is to be supplied by this Government, but no arrangements for it have yet been made, according to the Textile Alliance. This organization says that the price for these wools will be "the price basis current at the time of shipment from Australia for the issue of wool for Government purposes to manufacturers in the United Kingdom, less the cost of freight and insurance from Australia to the United Kingdom." This would indicate that domestic manufacturers are to get the wool at the same price as do those in England. In connection with this matter of price it is worth calling attention to the communication sent to President Wilson by the Committee on Wool Control of the Philadelphia Wool and Textile Association stating that "a stable value for wool for 1918 is of the utmost importance," and that a committee of the association be permitted to submit a concrete plan for fixing "the value of wool and wool textiles." In the goods market there is very little new to record. Clothiers continue to pick up small stocks, mostly of staples, and are trying to get advance data on the offerings for the next heavyweight season. The desire runs rather to staples than to fancies. In the dress goods end there has been somewhat more demand for spot goods.

THESE TOYS ARE SOMEWHAT COSTLY

Examples of the Kinds Which Are Offered to Those Having Money to Spend.

With no intention of supplying a gigantic Christmas stocking for the little tots of war-striken France or Belgium, a certain wealthy woman spent about two hours in a local toy shop recently with her secretary, during which she ordered playthings valued at close to $4,500. It must at least be presumed, in justice to this feminine Santa Claus, that she has contributed largely to any sums being raised to brighten the lives of the small residents of the countries referred to, but the purchases in question were designed to make happy her own children and those of friends or relatives in this and other cities.

The question may arise as to how such a large sum could be spent for toys in so brief a time, unless they were being bought in wholesale quantities, but a trip through the shop she visited soon answers it. For instance, there is a six-foot toy automobile of the roadster type, having real electric lights and a spare wheel, which is priced at $65. The power for this car is supplied by the rider, but there is another one, a two-seated roadster priced at $175, that really runs. It is propelled by a patent motor wheel that is also used to convert bicycles into motorcycles. It is equipped with pneumatic tires and has most of the appointments of a real car of its type.

Other toys in the automobile line include a tandem coaster priced at $30, a $45 war ambulance, four feet high and propelled by pedals operated by the rider, and a "submarine chaser" on wheels that sells for $25. This chaser is four or five feet long, runs under pedal power generated by the rider, has a gun turret mounted on the forward deck, and is equipped with flagstaffs fore and aft.

For those whose inclinations run that way there are pool and billiard tables, or combinations of both, that bring prices ranging up to $115, according to kind and size. Also, for big and little boys, there are pneumatic punching figures that have a habit of doing their bit on the unwary boxer. They sell for $35. Then there is a toy treadmill machine which can really be used for exercising that is priced at $17.50. For outdoor use there are dozens of kinds of toys in this store, including a 9-foot 4-inch bob sled, nicely padded, which brings $25.

Tiny devotees of the game of pocket billiards can be accommodated by a miniature table, completely furnished with balls, triangle, and novel little air-pressure cues that are worked by pressing a small bulb. The price is $15. For boys of a mechanical turn of mind there are construction sets galore, and at a wide range of prices. Carpenter's benches may be had without tools at prices running to $16.50. The tools themselves cost another tidy sum.

The aristocrats in the line of toy boats bring $200, or close to it. One priced at $200 is a fully-rigged, three-masted schooner that is guaranteed to sail. It is about 7 feet long. For $175 may be purchased a hand-made metal submarine chaser about four feet long and complete in all details. It is operated by electric batteries and can develop considerable speed. Other boats include mechanical steamers selling as high as $60, small battleships at $35, "freighters," which actually can be given cargoes, at $16.50; an electrically operated wooden submarine chaser at $35, and another one, of metal, at $65.

For the boy who has a desire to be a railroad magnate or who faces the prospect of being one some day, whether he wants to or not, there are electric railroad systems which, though sold by the piece, will run into a very tidy sum if they are well equipped. For instance, the star among the electric trains in this store sells for $35, while a bridge equipped with an electrically operated signal system costs $12. A roundhouse is priced at $12 and a tunnel at $2.25. The prices of the tracks on which these trains run range from 25 cents a foot up, according to the size of the purchase.

If a boy's taste for machinery runs to steam instead of electricity the store can supply him with steam outfits selling up to $100. In these actual fire and water produce real steam enough to drive a dynamo, which in turn produces current sufficient to operate lights and even to drive an electric train if properly coupled up with the system, by recharging the batteries. Because of this it could easily be used in conjunction with an electric train system. Other steam outfits may be had at $45 to $75. Also, for the practically-inclined youngster, there is a two-station, semi-wireless outfit that is priced at $15. Then, at $75, there is a moving-picture machine that can be used to project pictures in the home. Airplanes that will really fly can also be had. They are sold both in parts and "put up," and range in price from $18 to $30.

Toy autos, differing from the ones described heretofore in that they are too small for the owner to ride in, can be had copied in complete detail at $40 and down. French motor ambulances, for instance, cost but $10. A small armored car sells at $16.50. An electric lighted small French garage costs $35.

For both boys and girls of various ages, "occupation baskets" may be had from $12 up. They contain fourteen different gifts, devised to suit the ages of the children for whom they are intended. Boxes of simply worked, mystifying tricks that can be used by youngsters of both sexes set indulgent parents back $10. Sixteen dollars is the price of a furnished bath stand, equipped with a doll and doll's clothes, also with mirror, brushes, &c. Baskets of children's dishes sell up to $15.

For use in outdoor play houses there are fair-sized stoves that are in every detail complete copies of a regular kitchen range. They are equipped with small granite cooking utensils that can be used for actual cooking. In these stoves, which cost $40, real fires may be built. At something less than this price there is a kitchenette stand, which has indestructible cooking utensils and an indestructible tea set. It also has a tiny alcohol stove on the order of a gas range, and with it are sold real provisions put up in small packages. Other stoves on which real cooking may be done, and which get their heat either from electricity, gas, or alcohol, bring prices running up to $22.50.

Also for the domestically inclined young miss there is a six-room doll's house, fully furnished, that is priced at $98. The furnishings even include tiny pictures on the walls and small candles on the dresser in the bedroom. The dining room table is fully supplied with dishes, and near by is a tiny stand holding a tinier telephone. In the living room there is a "bear skin" rug, while several of the other rooms are furnished with rag ones. The kitchen has a little stove with granite cooking utensils, sink, broom, &c. In the furnishings of this domicile not even a billiard table has been overlooked. Other doll's houses may be had at $40 to $65, most of the higher-priced imported ones being missing from the current year's offerings because of the war.

One small phonograph, with records of an appropriate size, suitable for supplying kiddies' dance music, brings $10, while another, which has a traveling case, is $15. In the line of animal toys there is a good-sized rocking elephant which sells for $50, while another one, on wheels and able to make considerable noise on occasion, brings $20. A lion on wheels sells at $30, and there are camels and other animals also to be had. All of these animals are built on steel frames and are said to be strong enough to bear the weight of a grown person. Mechanical dogs, bears, &c., bring $18.

At $84.73 there is a seven-piece set of mahogany boudoir furniture consisting of round table, chiffonier, dresser with mirror, a four-poster bed, a straight chair, an arm chair, and a rocker. These may be bought separately if desired. All of the furniture is neatly and prettily upholstered, and the bed has a silk quilt to set it off.

There is an almost endless assortment of dolls and dolls' equipment. Small mechanical dolls, singly or in combination, are priced at $16.50 or thereabout. One of the combinations shows a prettily dressed Japanese woman being drawn in a rickshaw by a coolie who is also quite nattily attired. Dressed dolls, fully attired for street or house and in the top of the mode, may be had at prices running up close to $40. These have fine flax hair, which this year, because of the scarcity and high cost of real hair, is being much used on dolls.

For $54 may be had a doll's trousseau basket, complete with the doll and a wide assortment of small clothing—several complete changes, in fact—toilet articles, &c. A new thing in the way of an unbreakable doll, made entirely of wood and having spring instead of rubber joints, is priced at $10. They are comparatively small in size. Other toys involving dolls and doll's clothes run up to $45.

For misses there is an attractive desk set that sells for $40, while a traveling writing tablet, designed also for young ladies, is marked $22.50. A child's tea wagon, equipped with real china and silver spoons, is $22. A fancy trimmed brass bed for a doll, 30 inches long, costs $25, while the same price is asked for an attractive 30-inch doll's bassinet.

Nor are the books in the store in question the kind that can be bought for little or nothing. There are some cheap ones, to be sure, but there is one that sells at $15. It is written by a well-known author and illustrated by an artist of like fame. The paper is of the Japanese hand-made variety, deckle edged, and the binding is of vellum.

The things described above, and others of about the same level of prices, but too numerous to mention here, will easily account, it can be seen, for the quick expenditure of the sum mentioned at the outset. Particularly is this true when the young recipients live in different places and the toys can be bought in multiples for distribution among them.

AT FALL RIVER MILLS.

Demand Has Been Active and Prices Show Keen Advances.

Special to The New York Times.

FALL RIVER, Nov. 17.—There has been active business in cotton goods this week, and it is reported that some of the individual orders which have been received and accepted have been very large. Various low count goods of wide construction have been in very good demand. Not only did buyers provide for their immediate wants when the goods were available, but they purchased on contracts some of which will not begin till about the middle of next Spring.

The demand for narrow goods has been very keen, 27-inch goods have sold in very large quantities, and new high levels have been reached for them. There are no spots of 27-inch 64-60s but, if there were, they could very easily command premium prices. Other narrow goods have also received much attention from buyers.

Manufacturers of twills, sateens, and other specialties have done a very good business, and prices on these goods have advanced sharply. On some of the more popular makes of twills and sateens mills are so well sold up that they cannot take on any more business and it would be almost impossible to secure spots.

The cotton yarn markets have been active all week. There still exists a strong demand for yarns suitable for the manufacture of automobile tires. Manufacturers of cloth in some cases, being unable to spin enough of yarn in their own mills, have been compelled to come into the open markets and purchase their supplies. Fine goods have been in fair demand.

The total sales of cloth for the week are estimated between 250,000 and 300,000 pieces, of which about 60,000 pieces are spots. The week closed with the demand active and prices showing keen advances.

Mills Not Anxious for Orders.

Manufacturers of clothes for men who have been looking around in the local market for their requirements in woolens for next Fall are said not to have found mill agents in a very receptive mood. Sellers, apparently, are not eager just at this time for business too far ahead. Until the wool situation is a little more cleared and Government requirements between now and next Fall have been more definitely determined, it does not seem likely that mills will be over-anxious for orders. Small lots have been placed here and there, however, and prices as a rule have been higher. The question of mixing cotton and wool is also one which the mills would like to have settled before the season develops too far.

Military Styles in Men's Caps.

The war has exerted a strong influence on the new novelty styles in men's caps for sports wear. One, which is particularly attractive and is said to be selling in considerable quantities, is a "trench cap," with a flaring top, a square cut visor, and a strap of the cap material across the front, with a small metal buckle in the centre. The cap is made up in a soft finished cloth in solid brown. It is also offered in tweed and in plaids and checks of black and white, and other shades. It is priced to retail at $3.50.

OPPORTUNITY FOR TRADE WITH CHINA

Conditions at Present Said to be Extremely Favorable for Its Expansion.

In a talk with a reporter of THE TIMES yesterday D. E. Douty of the United States Conditioning and Testing Company, who just recently returned from a trip through China, called attention to the opportunities for trade with that country. With its population of over 400,000,000 people and its vast natural resources, he declared China's tremendous latent purchasing power, now in the process of awakening, offers almost unlimited possibilities for the expansion of American foreign trade.

"The conditions necessary to secure this trade," said Mr. Douty, "are most decidedly in favor of the United States. Both the Chinese Government and the Chinese people have wonderful faith, trust, and confidence in Americans. The unselfish attitude which this Government has always manifested, and has upon several occasions demonstrated in a substantial manner, is quite universally known by the Chinese population, notwithstanding the fact that a very large proportion of them cannot read. In my travels through the raw silk producing districts of extreme Southwestern China I met and talked with silk mill foremen who referred in a most appreciative manner to the remission of the Boxer indemnity and the just and sympathetic administration by the American troops of that portion of Pekin intrusted to them after the uprising had been quelled. In Central China and Manchuria I found ample evidence of the kindly feeling toward American business men and corresponding knowledge and appreciation of the Boxer incident.

"For a quarter of a century the development of trade with South America has been urged with but slight success. Not until the European war practically terminated all commercial intercourse between the principal European countries and South America did this country's trade with the southern continent assume anything like the proportions that it should. Since the war, however, trading with South America has become almost a forced condition, and some firms have made vigorous endeavors to introduce and establish permanent trade connections with the southern markets.

"The actual value of this trade, however, has always been overestimated by theorists who overlooked the fact that South America is a very sparsely populated country, containing only a few millions of people scattered along the seaboards. On account of this its purchasing power is necessarily not very great.

"In contrast to this China offers an immense population concentrated at many points into large communities and, on account of its great wealth in natural resources, possessing vast latent purchasing power. As the standards of working and living in China improve the consumption of her 400,000,000 people will be gigantic, and that group of nations best prepared to supply it and to take in exchange those products which the Chinese industries produce will secure a valuable national and world asset. And as far as the Chinese people are concerned not only is the way open and ready for the American business man to supply these wants, but China actually prefers to deal with us rather than with almost any other country.

"There are two important factors which will determine the future success of our efforts in Oriental trade. The one involves the Federal laws of the United States which control commercial operations. The other has to do with the policies and methods practiced by the business organizations which attempt Oriental trade.

"The first includes the enactment of a federal incorporation act, the extension of the Federal Reserve act to further facilitate the establishing of banks in foreign countries, the modification of the maritime laws so as to secure the development of American shipping, and finally, the permanent amendment of the anti-trust law to permit the co-operation and union of American firms and individuals striving for export business.

"The second, which is of equal importance, involves an almost complete change in the policies and methods of American organizations, such as adapting the merchandise to the needs of the buyer, instead of trying to force the acceptance of an absolutely fixed product; the training of American young men for foreign service, the establishment and maintenance of offices in the trade centres of the Far East, and the management of those offices in accordance with the customs of the people.

"Our provincial method of merchandising at a distance from the base through an organization of traveling salesmen or through brokerage and commission houses will not develop in China a substantial international trade, whether buying or selling—American business in China must be represented by American business men.

"The Chinese merchant is a clever, astute, sensitive, but unemotional business man. He will bicker over the most minute detail and drive a shrewd bargain. He is cunning, at times crafty, and occasionally insincere. But as soon as the understanding is reached and the conditions of the transaction are agreed upon he is one of the most dependable among all nationals.

"In the Chinese business world 'face' is everything, and the Chinese merchant prizes, protests, and sustains it as an American business man does his credit at the bank. The dependability of a personal agreement between an American and Chinese business man is the strongest link to bind the two nations in international commerce, and it is sincerely to be hoped that American firms entering China may so conduct their business with the Chinese that the present confidence will not be disturbed.

"Other nationals have exploited the Chinese, discredited their intelligence and abused their confidence. Their loss is irretrievable. The Chinese are a very patient, long-suffering, and placid people, but they have good memories and the ancient habit of handing on from generation to generation their likes and dislikes. Thus a firm or a nation once discredited has small chance of getting back on a footing of confidence."

IN VOGUE IN MILLINERY.

Favored Styles as Shown at the Horse Show and the Opera.

The latest bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America has this to say about the Horse Show and the lack of new millinery styles it brought out:

"The crowds here are larger than for many years, (because the proceeds are to be given to the Red Cross,) and yet one sees nothing new in millinery styles either in the ring or in the boxes.

"One new note in riding hats was struck when some of the stores showed a Royal Flying Corps hat in khaki and black for women's habits, and another store showed the same in white duvetyn, but at the show hatters' plush with high bell crowns, velour sailors and mannish hats were seen. The R. F. C. hat, however, has been shown about town on young misses, who could carry the rather swank, little tilted hat without appearing ridiculous.

"In the boxes at the show one notes that ostrich was the popular trimming and that small shapes predominated. Russian and high-draped turbans of velvet, with fur, velvet with duvetyn, satin antique and all fur, metallic and all satin were noted. Most popular in trimmings, aside from ostrich, were fancy tips, paradise, goura, quills, jet ornaments and wool chenille flowers. In color, black and gray were rather prominent.

"At the opening of the Metropolitan Opera House," the bulletin continues, "red, white, blue and gray were the predominant colors. Whatever favorable talk there has been of the revival of the evening hat was proved false by the entire absence of hats of this kind at the opening."

RAW SILK MARKETS.

A Period of Quiet Has Induced Japanese to Stop Reeling.

The Yokohama raw silk market shows no change in prices for the past week, and business has been rather quiet. The reelers have finally decided, in order to uphold the market, to reduce immediately the working hours of their filandas from fourteen to eleven, and to stop reeling shinshius on Dec. 15. The reeling of kansais is to be stopped on Dec. 20, the filandas to be reopened on Jan. 23. Reports received by A. P. Villa & Brothers of this city put the present stock of silk available at Yokohama at 24,000 bales.

The Canton market continues extremely dull, with a downward tendency. There is almost an utter absence of demand from this country and only a few orders have been placed lately by the Lyons manufacturers. The advancing exchange is holding business back, in that it makes the laid-down cost too high in comparison with Japanese silks. Shanghai is weak and sluggish for tsatlees and tussahs, and prices on these grades have lost about 20 to 25 cents a pound. Steam filatures are unchanged.

Quotations in the Italian market continue too high to interest buyers in this country, although a recent drop in exchange has brought these silks to a basis almost low enough to result in a renewal of American buying. In this city a better feeling exists, and a marked improvement in business has been noticeable in the last few days. The fabric manufacturers are looking forward to an active Spring season.

Southern Rhodesia Mineral Output.

The total value of the mineral production of southern Rhodesia for the month of July, according to Consul John P. Bray, stationed in Johannesburg, South Africa, amounted to $1,916,132. The chief item making up this total was gold, which amounted to 60,002 ounces of a value of $1,405,109. The balance of $511,024 was made up chiefly of chrome ore, copper, coal, and asbestos. The diamond output this year only amounted to a little over $1,000.

BUSINESS NOTES.

The local buying offices of M. E. Smith & Co., Inc., and the Burgess-Nash Company, both of Omaha, Neb., will be located after tomorrow in Rooms 1212 and 1214 of the Fifth Avenue Building, 200 Fifth Avenue, H. B Hull will continue in charge.

Joseph Solomon, formerly business manager of the Retail Millinery Association of America, has entered the advertising and sales promotion business on his own account. He has opened an office in the Flatiron Building, and will specialize on millinery accounts.

Arthur A. Heimlich, who for several years has been connected with B. F. Levis, resident buyer, 72 Madison Avenue, as buyer of housefurnishings, toys, and kindred lines, will on Dec. 1 assume a similar position with the Weisberger Company of Richmond, Va.

URUGUAY'S WOOL CLIP.

This Year's Said to be Not Only Large, but of Good Quality.

From present indications, reports Consul William Dawson from Montevideo, it is evident that the wool clip in Uruguay this year will be unusually satisfactory, both as to quality and quantity. Weather conditions have been favorable for sheep during the last few months, and flocks are in excellent condition. There have been no epidemics, and the percentage of lambs born has been unusually high. The wool is reported to be very fine, well grown, and free from seed. It is authoritatively estimated that this year's wool clip in Uruguay will establish a new high record.

The probable output of the season is conservatively estimated at over 95,000 bales of 1,000 pounds each. The opinion is held by many well-informed exporters that during the coming year Montevideo will export between 80,000 and 92,000 bales of wool, while 8,000 to 10,000 bales may be shipped from Salto, Paysandu, and Mercedes to Buenos Aires for export. This would mean that Montevideo wool shipments for the coming season would be increased by about 20 per cent.

During the last few months prices in the Uruguayan market have been constantly advancing. A number of sales have been reported as high as $14.90 (gold) per unit of 10 kilos, (22 pounds.) Concerning the probable future course of prices there are various predictions among exporters. Those who forecast a drop in the market base their opinions on the lack of interest of American buyers at present prices, and the belief that American requirements will be met to a great extent by the Australian clip.

TRADE IN BROAD SILKS.

Dullness Still Continues Owing to Various Circumstances.

There seems to be nothing in the local broad silk situation to warrant the belief that the present dull period is likely to end in the immediate future. It is said that goods have not moved very rapidly over the counter this Fall, and that buyers consequently are still fairly well stocked with merchandise. What little they may require from time to time, it seems, they can pick up in small lots from jobbers here and there and at prices sometimes appreciably under the mill figures.

The coal situation, and the placing of many mills at the bottom of the list of those to be supplied, is causing some little concern among mill people as to future production. On the other hand, it is felt in some quarters that the prospects of reduced output may cause a renewal of buying against such an eventuality.

Stability in raw silk, through the minimum prices fixed and held in Yokohama, is looked upon as the best way to revive buyers. So long as there is possibility of lower prices, they naturally will hold off until the last minute, but with no signs of weakening and with the chances of higher prices when mills generally begin buying raws again, a very different situation should develop.

In filling in orders during the week, it is said that satins, taffetas and crêpes have been the leaders. For Spring, foulards, prints and jersey weaves have been good. Under present conditions, sellers believe that staple lines built for service will be the most in demand, and that fancy fabrics and designs are likely to be more or less neglected.

Speakers to Credit Men Chosen.

The trade acceptance will be tho topic of discussion at the first monthly meeting of the 1917-18 series to be held by the New York Credit Men's Association. The following speakers have been announced: Lewis E. Pierson, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Irving National Bank and Chairman of the American Trade Acceptance Council; George Woodruff, President of the First National Bank of Joliet, Ill.; Kenneth R. Hooker, President of the Putnam-Hooker Company of Cincinnati and Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the National Association of Credit Men, and Robert H. Treman, Deputy Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. The meeting will be held on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, at the Hotel Astor.

Gray Goods Sales Were Fair.

Trading in gray goods was fairly active here yesterday, much of the business being done on the low-count printcloths that played such a large part in Friday's business. Included in these were 38 1-2-inch 48 squares, 44 squares and 44-40s. Further early 1918 sales of the last-named were again put through at 7 1-4 cents, in spite of the fact that some houses were asking 7 3-8 cents for them. Some of the high-count wide printcloths also sold yesterday, including spot 38 1-2-inch 64-60s, at 11 1-8 to 11 1-4 cents, according to the house which made the sale. Spot business was also done on 39-inch 68-72s in certain quarters at 12 3-4 cents. The day's sheeting business contained little of more than ordinary interest.

Chinese Antimony Exports.

The restrictions placed on exports of refined Chinese antimony to the United States via Hongkong have been relaxed for the present, according to a dispatch from the American Ambassador in London. Should shipping difficulties or other circumstances make it necessary, however, these restrictions may again be put in force, thus prohibiting antimony exports to any points other than the United Kingdom.

NEW COMMANDER IN CHIEF

Gen. Dukhonin Proclaims Himself Temporary Head of Provisional Government Forces.

By HAROLD WILLIAMS.

Copyright, 1917, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 18, (Night.)—Civil war continues. A large force is approaching Petrograd, for what purpose is unknown. Another large force is said to be approaching Moscow. There has been fighting in Kakan and Tasskent. Kaledines's force has not, as has been reported, reached Kharkov and Voronetz. It is still in the Donetz basin, halfway between Novo Cherkhask and Veronetz.

The bread ration in Petrograd has been reduced to three-quarters of a pound every two days.

Lenine's Government has split. Commissary of Trade and Industry Nogin, Minister of the Interior Miliutin, Minister of Food Teodorovich, Minister for Labor Shlyapiniko, and the Commissaries of Ways of Communication, the Press, and the Red Guard formally announced their resignation. They consider it necessary to come to terms with other Socialists to form a Government of all the Socialist parties.

I am now able to furnish details of recent events. On Wednesday, after a few days of desultory fighting between Gatchina and Tsarskoe Selo, Kerensky's small Cossack force of 1,500 men concluded an armistice with the Bolshevik defending party, these consisting of bluejackets, a few detachments of infantry, and the Werkmen's Red Guard, in all about 16,000 men.

General Krasnoff, commanding the Cossack force, offered to send Kerensky to Petrograd under convoy of his Cossacks, but during the preparations Kerensky escaped. This was at 1 o'clock in the morning of Wednesday. His whereabouts is now unknown. It would appear that Kerensky is universally discredited. The collapse of his prestige explains the failure of his operations against the Bolsheviki. General Dukhonin has provisionally assumed the chief command.

The Bolshevik forces re-entered Petrograd on Thursday with bands playing. The population were silent. The bulk of the fighting fell on the naval men and a few detachments of the Red Guard, who suffered some losses. The Cossack losses were insignificant.

Some remnants of the Petrograd garrison support the Bolsheviki. Others are neutral. Opinion among the workmen is divided. Several factories passed resolutions protesting against the Bolsheviki seizure of power.

As regards other cities, in Kiev there has been some slight disturbance of ordinary citizen life. The city has repeatedly changed hands. The latest news is that Czech troops fighting for the Government have secured the mastery. Strong protests against the Bolsheviki are made in many provincial towns, and at the front the political situation is unprecedented.

New Army from the Front.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 18, (2:30 P. M.)—Reports of a new army, composed of various elements from the front and the vanguard of which is said to be close to Gatchina, have sent a new thrill through the city. If the reports are to be credited, the new force, the aim of which is to release the city from the control of the Bolsheviki, which is commanded by Staff Captain Pavloff of the Social-Democratic Workmen's Party, already has had brushes with the defending outposts of the Bolsheviki Army.

According to some versions, M. Kerensky is returning with the army. Still other reports tell of an armored train approaching from the direction of Moscow pulling up the rails as it proceeds. All the reports are impossible of confirmation.

A report of the interfrontal congress for the supply of the armies is published today. It declares the inability of the congress further to carry on the burden laid upon it by the General Army Committee, and that, therefore, unless the present situation is quickly clarified it will give up the task and not be responsible for consequences.

The Committee for the Salvation of the Revolution has protested against the arrest of Premier Kerensky and for the taking into custody of other members of the Provisional Government on the ground that they are answerable only to the Constituent Assembly. The town Duma is at loggerheads with the Revolutionary Committee over the attempts of the latter to take over the management of the telephones.

The Workmen's Gazette today prints in huge type on its front page a mani-

General Kaledines Occupies Coalfields; Controls Russia's Entire System of Railroad

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKHOLM, Nov. 18.—General Kaledines and his Cossacks have a position of strategic advantage. They occupied the great Donetz coalfield, and have, as a consequence, the whole Russian system of railway communications at their mercy.

Kaledines has it in his power now to starve or freeze Petrograd out. At Kharkov he stopped 200 wagons loaded with food for Petrograd, and has announced his intention of stopping the whole transport of food to the capital, already in a state of famine, and thus to subdue the city.

Francis Asks for Train to Take 200 Americans Away

LONDON, Monday, Nov. 19.—The American Embassy at Petrograd, according to a Reuter dispatch, has requested that a train be provided to convey 200 members of the American colony in Petrograd to Harbin.

Harbin is a town in Manchuria where the Trans-Siberian Railroad bifurcates, one branch running to Dalny and the other to Vladivostok. Passage home could be procured at either of these ports.

Diaz Holding His Trentino Front While Checking Piave Attacks

Rome Reports Slight Withdrawals Between the Brenta and Piave Rivers and the Expulsion of Invaders Who Crossed the Latter Near Fagare.

ROME, Nov. 18.—Further attempts by the enemy to force crossings of the Piave River were frustrated by the Italian troops yesterday, and in a brilliant counterattack the Austro-German forces which previously had gained a footing on the west bank, in the Fagare zone, were completely swept out of this area, the War Office announced today.

The Austro-German forces hemmed in at the Zenson loop tried to break out, but were repulsed with heavy loss and ultimately driven further back into the loop.

The Italian line on the Asiago Plateau is withstanding extremely violent attacks, the defensive units displaying brilliancy in their resistance and successful counterattacks.

The text of the official statement reads:

On the Asiago Plateau on the night of Nov. 16-17 the enemy, insisting upon his attempt to force our line from Monte Sisemol to Monte Castelgomberto, attacked in the direction of Monte Zomo, east of Gallio. The attack, repeated four times with extreme violence, was completely broken up by the gallant Ligurian Brigade. More to the north, in the direction of Casera and Meletta d' Avanti, our parties of the Perogia Brigade retook with great courage some advanced elements lost during the previous days, capturing about 100 prisoners.

Between the Brenta and the Piave the enemy pressure has been increasing from the evening of the 16th. The masses of the enemy obliged our troops at some points not to prolong their defense at some advanced positions, which have been abandoned in an orderly withdrawal after fierce resistance and brilliant counterattacks. North of Quero, the Como Brigade has again shown its valor.

Yesterday along the Piave parties of the Caserta Brigade, together with elements of other units, in an irresistible advance completely swept the enemy from the Fagare zone. The Spinerole Brigade repulsed with great loss for the enemy an attack attempted by the troops closed in at Zenson, driving them further back into the loop of the river. Attempts to cross the river carried out at other places were promptly frustrated.

On the right bank of the Piave during Nov. 16 and 17 a total of 51 officers, 1,212 men and 27 machine guns was captured.

Italian Attacks Vain, Berlin Says.

BERLIN, Nov. 18, (via London.)—The Italians are counterattacking heavily in the hill district northeast of Asiago. Army Headquarters announced this afternoon that the enemy attacks, launched against heights which had been taken from the Italians, were fruitless and costly to the attacking forces. The afternoon statement says:

Northeast of Asiago strong Italian forces suffered sanguinary losses in fruitless attacks against heights which had been wrested from them.

Between the Brenta and the Piave the artillery duel increased at times.

The supplementary report from General Headquarters tonight reads:

Between the Brenta and Piave Rivers the Italians have been driven from further strong mountain positions.

Hope for Turning of the Tide.

By The Associated Press.

ITALIAN HEADQUARTERS IN NORTHERN ITALY, Nov. 17, (Delayed.)—The Battle of the Piave River, as it will be known, has now developed to a stage where the enemy's first attempts to make a breach in the Italian lines have failed. This defensive result has not only been accomplished by the Italian army, but time has been gained to effect such a recovery from the retreat as will permit the army to resume its offensive as well as its defensive power.

The enemy was taking full advantage of the delicate period after the retreat, knowing that every day counted for the restoration of the solidity of the Italian offensive force. In this knowledge, too, the Italian supreme command is proceeding methodically, giving ground here and there and holding elsewhere, as all this is part of a systematic plan to bring to the army offensive qualities to deal a blow at a chosen moment.

One hears tonight talk in high quarters that if the Piave line holds another few days the tide will be turned, as its successful defense through six fearful days has established that the enemy has his limitations.

Thus far, nothing beyond battalions has crossed the river. And no corps or brigade, much less divisions, has passed the dead line. Only at Zenson and Grisolera are there any serious lodgments on the west bank of the Piave, and today the enemy was forced back to the river at Zenson and elsewhere, with more than 1,000 men captured, while the flood waters bar him before Grisolera.

It is because the Piave has resisted so well that the enemy is now turning his attention to the north and trying to make a breach there, which he failed to make on the Piave. The line on the north runs along Asiago, Cismon, and Quero, and there the Italian position remains virtually unchanged.

In the east, where the mountain line joins the Piave, the Italian position has been moved a little further back, not in giving ground, but to solidify the whole northern front from Monte Tondarecar on the west to the Piave on the east, thus consolidating the defense at the centre and on both northern wings.

This is the situation tonight, after one of the most trying weeks Italy has ever known. It makes the whole country breathe more easily and await with serenity, almost confidence, those crucial days still ahead.

Fierce Fighting on Northern Front.

On the northern line and along the Piave River, above Zenson, the fighting has assumed extreme severity. The enemy, whose forces exceed the Italians on the northern line, has now thrown fresh divisions into the battle in a supreme effort to break through. The Italians are resisting with desperate tenacity, using hand grenades to meet the infantry rushes following artillery and machine gun fire. It is one of the bitterest struggles of the war, and the losses are heavy.

On the Piave River the enemy got across at two points, Follina and Fagare, a few miles above Zenson; but those at Follina were annihilated by artillery and hand-to-hand fighting, while those at Fagare were driven back to the western bank with heavy losses, and many were captured.

The Italian lines are holding in the main, but the fury of the nemy assaults renew the gravity of the situation.

Navy Readers Splendid Service.

The Italian navy is doing splendid service, seconding the army in the bombardment of enemy positions toward the mouth of the Piave River. The navy, which held the coast front from the mouth of the Izonso to Grado, saved all of its material and cannon, and these are now being trained on the enemy at the mouth of the river and for some distance up, where the water is deep and wide. Near Revedoli an Italian marine battalion repulsed, on Saturday, a rush made by an Austrian storming party, and Italian torpedo boats off Poro di Cortellazzo drove off an attack of an Austrian torpedo fleet. This latter action was accompanied by operations of a fleet of Italian hydroplanes and seconded by Italian coast batteries.

Conditions all along the line show that the spirits of the Italians have been reanimated by the recent successes.

On the middle Piave River, where the Austrians succeeded in gaining a foothold on the west bank near Zenson, they are held to the water's edge, and their only communication with the east bank is at night, when a flatboat is dragged from side to side, bringing a small stock of supplies. Here on the shore line they have set up a line of machine guns to hold back the Italians from pushing them into the river. Some of the more ardent Italians have begged for leave to rush this line, and are restrained only by the positive orders of their commander, who will not send his men to face such machine gun fire when he believes that the line can be reduced by others means.

Hope to Split the Italian Armies.

Further north, where the front turns westward from the Piave River across the Asiago Plateau, General Ritter von Krobatin, former Austrian Minister of War, is driving his Austrian forces, together with one Hungarian division, in an attack which may be the turning point of the whole operation. It is here that the Piave front and the Trentino front meet, and Krobatin is throwing all of his pressure on this meeting point so as to force a wedge between the two

Swiss Pacifists Riot Three Nights in Zurich; Fight Police from Barricades; Some Killed

ZURICH, Nov. 18.—The police have arrested eighty persons charged with inciting Swiss troops to disobey orders and to insult their officers as a result of pacifist manifestations here. Three battalions of infantry and three squadrons of cavalry arrived today in anticipation of a possible fresh outbreak.

The officer commanding the troops has full power to preserve order. All meetings and gatherings in the streets have been prohibited.

PARIS, Nov. 18.—A dispatch to the Havas Agency from Zurich, Switzerland, referring to the pacifist manifestation of Friday, says:

"Disorders of increased gravity broke out again last night. Two thousand persons assembled in the Place Helvetia, and then marched, singing 'The Internationale,' to the prison where were confined those persons arrested during the riots of Friday night. The blinds and windows of the prison were smashed, and the police charged the mob with drawn sabres.

"The rioters again erected barricades and replied with volleys of stones, whereupon the police drew their revolvers and fired. Four persons were killed, including one policeman, a young man of 20, an old woman, and a boy of 14. A machine gun was brought into action, and, firing blank cartridges, brought the trouble to an end at 1 o'clock in the morning."

Other dispatches from Zurich and Geneva say the disorders at Zurich began at a meeting Thursday evening, which was addressed by two pacifists, Dastwyler and Rotter, their theme being the Russian revolution. The orators called on their hearers to sustain the pacifist movement by refusing service in and supplies for the Swiss Army.

Later the proposal was made to proceed to a factory producing munitions for Germany. Nearly a thousand persons assembled in the court of the factory and summoned the managers, and demanded that they suspend work. The mob began breaking windows in the factory, the lights of which were put out. Then the crowd went to another factory, and it was decided to close this concern after a conference had been held with the two pacifist delegates.

A Zurich dispatch to La Presse says a dozen persons were killed, and that a large number were wounded, and that the movement of the population has been prohibited in several quarters of the town.

A dispatch to La Liberte says the premises of the newspaper Neue Zurcher Zeitung were attacked by the rioters, who forced an entrance, smashed the presses, and sacked the telegraph and editorial rooms.

JAPAN REFUSES OFFER FOR SHIPS

Negotiations Broken Off, Says Tokio, but Washington Still Expects Agreement.

PRICE IS CHIEF OBSTACLE

Efforts to Close Deal Will Be Renewed—Japan Fears Loss of European Trade.

TOKIO, Saturday, Nov. 17, (Delayed.)—In a lengthy statement today the Department of Communications announced that the negotiations with the United States, by which Japan was seeking to have the American embargo on steel raised to a certain extent in Japan's favor, had been broken off, to Japan's regret, because of the differing circumstances in which the two countries were placed.

America's demand for Japanese shipping in return for the concession would virtually destroy Japan's European trade, the statement said, while the equivalent offered was inadequate. Japan's assistance to her allies, the statement asserted, could not reach the extent of infringing upon the necessities of her national existence.

Tokio View Surprises Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Officials here received with some surprise tonight the report from Tokio that negotiations between Japan and the United States concerning the proposed trade of shipbuilding steel for ships had been broken off. In fact, it was not generally admitted that such was the case, and in some quarters confidence was expressed that an agreement would be reached within a short time which would bring more than 300,000 tons of Japanese merchant shipping into the transatlantic trade.

As far as could be learned here, the negotiations are still in progress. It has been proposed that the United States should purchase outright whatever Japanese tonnage is obtained and the question of price has been one of the stumbling blocks in the negotiations. A price around $175 a ton has been mentioned as the sum which the Government felt it should pay in taking over tonnage, although much higher rates have been paid in the open market for shipping.

One argument made by the United States Government in seeking a lower price than Japan considered justifiable was the fact that this nation stood ready to deliver steel for the same rate that it paid itself or $65 a ton for plates, a figure far below that which Japan was paying American industry before the embargo order on steel went into effect.

There seemed to be a distinct feeling tonight that, once a price agreement was reached, a trade would be put through. The portion of the Tokio dispatch which stated that America's demand for Japanese shipping in return for steel would virtually destroy Japan's European trade and infringe upon the necessities to her national existence, was not accepted here as a death blow to the success of the negotiations. It was felt that the removal of 300,000 tons or more of Japanese shipping would not cause so severe a restriction on Japanese interests, especially as Japan was to receive steel for the construction of other ships as a concession.

The negotiations have been going on for many weeks, and have been entered into by representatives of the State Department, the Shipping Board, and the War Trade Board. Recent reports were to the effect that much progress had been made, and an announcement that the terms of the deal were closed had been expected here for several days. Conferences on the question were held during the visit of the Japanese Mission in Washington. There has been no statement here, either at that time or within the last few days, to indicate that an agreement was improbable.

RAILROADS SEEK SPECIAL WAR RATE

Eastern Lines to Ask for Relief in Addition to the 15 Per Cent. on Freights.

OPERATION COST MOUNTING

Rise in Wages and Higher Prices for Coal and Steel Add $278,000,000 to Their Burden.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Railroad Presidents appearing tomorrow before the Interstate Commerce Commission in the rate appeal will present arguments for further relief than is proposed in the 15 per cent. advance sought. The heads of the Eastern carriers have been in conference here for several days and they have agreed to ask for additional war relief sufficient to place the railroads in shape to take care of Governmental needs and increased traffic.

The additional relief to be sought will be in the form of a percentage increase on class and commodity rates, and an increase of a few cents per ton on coal, coke, and ore. Daniel Willard, President of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, when he appeared before the commission suggested that there should be a war rate of 1 cent per hundred pounds on class freight. This might be lowered or removed, he declared, as conditions warranted. The war rate he proposed was in addition to the 15 per cent. advance now being urged upon the commission. Samuel Rea, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, insisted that the 15 per cent. increase would be insufficient and he proposed that the Government loan the railroads money needed at 4 per cent.

In last June the commission granted increases to the railroads which enhanced the revenues $97,000,000 a year. The increase now requested would put this amount up to $155,000,000. Both increases, the carriers will inform the commission tomorrow, will cover only slightly more than half the advance in cost of operation, resulting from higher wages, fuel, and materials. The advance in the price of bituminous coal alone has added $86,000,000 to the operating expenses of the Eastern roads. The rise in steel, copper, and other materials has placed an additional burden of $89,000,000 upon these roads, while the advances in wages total $103,000,000, representing a total increased operating cost of $278,000,000, exclusive of increased taxes of $20,000,000.

The higher freight rates granted last June already have been absorbed by advances in wages. Thus far in this year the increased wages paid by the railroads under the Adamson act have amounted to $38,000,000 a year for the trainmen, and increases were granted 60,000 other employes, representing an outlay of $67,000,000 a year. Two of the train brotherhoods have formulated demands for 40 per cent. more wages. That would amount to $46,000,000 a year.

When the brotherhood leaders visit the White House next Thursday, in response to the call of the President, it is expected that there will be some announcement as to the general policy of the Government with wage increases A report recently issued by the Bureau of Railway Economics shows that the average of earnings of train employes last year on all American roads was $1,344. The average in earnings of the other employes was $728. The advances in wages this year have raised the trainmen to an average of $1,550, and the other employes to $840.

The fixing of Government prices for coal and steel, the materials most largely entering into railroad operating cost, has relieved railroad managers of

Two German Ships Crippled, One Sunk By British in Fight Off Heligoland

LONDON, Nov. 18.—German light cruisers which fled through Heligoland Bight yesterday before British warships of similar type were pursued to within thirty miles of Heligoland, where they came under the protection of the German battle fleet and mine fields, the Admiralty announced today.

One of the German light cruisers was observed to be in flames and the machinery of another seemed to be damaged. One German mine sweeper was sunk. The British light forces returned without losses, with but little material damage to the ships and slight casualties among the personnel.

The announcement made by the Admiralty says:

There is no further detailed information yet regarding the operations of our light cruisers in the Heligoland Bight yesterday beyond the fact that the enemy's light cruisers were chased by them to within thirty miles of Heligoland, until they got under the protection of their battle fleet and mine fields, when our light forces returned.

One of the enemy's light cruisers was seen on fire. Another appeared damaged in her machinery, as she was dropping astern. An enemy mine sweeper was sunk, in addition. We had no losses and only slight material damage in ships. Our casualties in personnel were slight.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 18.—Strong British naval forces for the first time since early in the war attempted to break into the German Bight, (Heligoland,) on Saturday morning, says a Berlin dispatch today quoting an official statement dated Saturday.

The British were located by the German guard ships on the Horn Reef-Terschelling line, (about sixty miles out from Heligoland Island,) and the advance German naval forces, by a speedy counterthrust, easily repulsed them, it is declared, without losses on the German side.

PRESIDENT WILSON CABLES COL. HOUSE UNITY OF PLAN AND CONTROL IS ESSENTIAL TO SUCCESS OF THE ALLIES IN THE WAR

Lloyd George Faces Foes in Commons Today; Expected to Win Support for Allied Council

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The Parliamentary correspondents of the Sunday newspapers are unanimous in anticipation that tomorrow's important debate in the House of Commons on Premier Lloyd George's Paris speech will clear the air and end the controversy which has been raging during the last week. They picture the Premier in a most militant mood and welcoming the opportunity of defending his plan for an Allied War Council against his critics, represented as an irreconcilable combination of radicals, pacifists, and militant Conservatives.

It is expected that Mr. Lloyd George will clear away any misconception that his remarks in Paris were intended as a reflection on army leaders. He is also expected to deal with the prospective inclusion of American representatives in the council and to explain why no special arrangements have been made for naval co-ordination.

The political correspondent of The Sunday Times says that, with the exception of Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, the members of the War Cabinet are in full accord with the Premier's new policy of forming an Allied War Council, and will support him, even in the event of military resignations.

TURKS LOSE JAFFA, FLEE NORTHWARD

British Troops Occupy the Port of Jerusalem, Meeting No Opposition.

31 MILES FROM HOLY CITY

Famous in Biblical Times, and Figuring Among the Conquests of Napoleon.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The city of Jaffa, on the Mediterranean coast, was taken possession of by the British Army in Palestine yesterday. The Turks, who apparently are continuing their withdrawal northward, offered no opposition. The text of the official statement making this announcement reads:

Yesterday Jaffa was occupied by Australian and New Zealand mounted troops without opposition. The enemy appears to be continuing his retirement to the north.

Jaffa or Joppa, as it was known to the ancient mariners in the Mediterranean, is one of the oldest seaports in the world, and is built on a tongue of land jutting out from the coast of Palestine. It was the place where the cedars for building the great temple of Solomon in Jerusalem were landed, and also figured in history at the time of the Crusades. Napoleon captured Jaffa in 1799, and hundreds of his soldiers died there of cholera which came with the army from Egypt.

There is a good carriage road leading to Jerusalem, a distance of thirty-one miles, and also a railread fifty-four miles long built in 1892, which runs by the ancient town of Ramieh. The population of Jaffa numbers about 30,000 in normal times, and the chief exports are oranges and other fruits, leather goods, wool, corn, and soap. The chief object of interest in the ancient port is the house of Simon the Tanner, which is shown by the Syrians to tourists. In the suburbs are delightful gardens filled with orange, lemon, and spice trees.

The so-called harbor is an open roadstead with a reef of jagged rocks about a mile off the shore, between which the small boats have to pass that take passengers to and from the liners. Apart from the regular travelers from all over the world about 25,000 pilgrims landed at Jaffa every Spring before the war on their way to spend the Greek Easter in Jerusalem. The American missions have several fine buildings and schools in the port.

NEIL PRIMROSE KILLED.

Youngest Son of Earl of Rosebery Falls in Palestine Battle.

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 17.—The Evening Standard reports that the Hon. Neil Primrose, M. P., youngest son of the Earl of Rosebery, has been killed in Palestine. He was a lieutenant in the Bucks Yeomanry. In the present Government he had been Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs and Parliamentary Military Secretary to the Ministry of Munitions. He was born in 1882.

The Hon. Neil Primrose, who was a familiar figure in this city before the war, was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury and chief whip of the Lloyd George Administration in last January As chief whip he was responsible for the appearance in the House of Commons of a sufficient number of adherents to the Administration to assure a majority. He went to the front as a Lieutenant and staff officer with the Indian Corps at the beginning of the war, and won the Military Cross for delivering dispatches under heavy fire

He married Lady Victoria Stanley, daughter of the present Lord Derby, and with his wife made his home in Berkeley Square, London. Their wedding, which took place in 1915, was the most notable of the season, and was attended by Queen Alexandra, Princess Maud, and many officials and dignitaries. His mother, the late Hannah Rothschild, was the only child and sole heiress of Baron Meyer Rothschild, who was reputed to be the wealthiest member of his family.

COUNT ON 'TIGER' TO ROUSE FRANCE

New War Vigor Expected When Clemenceau's Aggression Is Turned on Germany.

MOVE TO CRUSH SCANDALS

Will Let Army Deal with Them—Step Also Taken to Modify the Censorship.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 18.—The return of "The Tiger," as Clémenceau is called, is one of most significant events in the history of the war. Slowly, but surely, the Allies are finding their men—their real men—and calling them to powor. It was just as inevitable that Clémenceau should again become Premier of France as that Lloyd George should have arisen in England.

No one can venture a guess at how long Clémenceau will remain. It is certain that while he lasts things will happen that will help the Allies win the war.

He has torn, clawed, and bitten his way to the top with all the tigerish vigor that is so distinctly his own. His enemies, cannot be counted, they are so many, yet the fact remains that the new Premier is the choice of the nation. To him the nation has turned in its hour of need, for with all his faults he is certainly the greatest contemporaneous French statesman, and in certain of his rowers takes rank with the great Frenchmen of any epoch.

It has been my privilege to know Clémenceau for several years and to be one of the few foreign newspaper men admitted to the editorial sanctum of L'Homme Enchaîné in the Rue Taitbout, where he has directed the wrecking of every Cabinet since the beginning of the war. From my talks with him and from other observations from many sources of information, I believe that France is now entering a new era, from which she can only emerge the victor.

May End Political Censorship.

In choosing Clémenceau, France has put away men without character and without strength. She has decided that she will be ruled by patriots and that from now on she intends to know the truth.

I believe that the coming of Clémenceau means really the end of the French political censor. If the political censor falls in France that will be one good job accomplished that the other allies can imitate in order to win the war. This ignorant, secretive, pernicious thing of evil has only had the effect of hiding truths that ought to have been known, and has undoubtedly prolonged the war.

Clémenceau has always despised this form of censorship, and has said so openly. Unfortunately, he has been about the only French editor with sufficient strength to override the censers' rule. Only once, in a serious clash, did the censor get the better of the argument, and he paid dearly for that advantage. The result was that Clémenceau, muzzled in his newspaper, took the floor in the Senate in his only speech of the war. That great and terrible speech was the flaying alive of the then Minister of Interior, Malvy. It resulted in the downfall of the Ribot Ministry.

Army to Deal with Scandals.

The fact that Clémenceau is in also augurs well that France will have an end to her long list of "scandals," for Clémenceau has decided to do what ought to have been done long ago—turn them over to the army. The army makes short shrift of such matters, and already the rats are hunting their holes. Those who knows Clémenceau, or anything about him will insist that he is perfect in character. About everything that can be said to the contrary has been dished up during the last few weeks since his figure has loomed as the only possible one to pull the nation out of the mire into which incompetents—to use a mild word—had dragged it.

Clémenceau did not get his nickname for nothing, and no one cares much about playing with a tiger. On entering the sanctum of L'Homme Enchaîné one even walked softly, so that the greater emotions might not be too suddenly aroused. I have been there when even the furniture did not seem safe. On the other hand, the tiger can purr and can gaze out of quizzical though satirical eyes, so that one can get on very pleasantly indeed if one is good.

The greatest objection ever launched against Clémenceau that seemed basic

NECESSARY TO JUST PEACE

By Unity Alone Can American Resources Be Best Employed.

HOUSE TO SEE ALLIED HEADS

Directed by President to Strive to Achieve Closest Possible Co-operation.

EFFECT ON TODAY'S DEBATE

Expected to Influence Commons' Discussion of Lloyd George's War Council Proposal.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—Colonel Edward M. House, head of the American Mission, has received a cablegram from President Wilson stating emphatically that the United States Government considers that unity of plan and control between all the Allies and the United States is essential in order to achieve a just and permanent peace.

President Wilson emphasizes the assertion that this unity must be accomplished if the great resources of the United States are to be used to the best advantage. He requests Colonel House to confer with the heads of the allied Governments with a view to achieving the closest possible co-operation.

President Wilson has asked Colonel House to attend the first meeting of the Supreme War Council, with General Tasker H. Bliss as military adviser. It is hoped that the meeting will take place in Paris before the end of the month.

Timed With Commons Debate.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—President Wilson's message to Colonel House, declaring for "unity of plan and control" of the conduct of the war among all the allies and laying down the principle that unity must be accomplished if the great resources of the United States are to be used to the best advantage, is expected here to create one of the greatest international sensations of the European struggle.

No doubt is felt here that The Associated Press dispatch from London summarizing the President's message to Colonel House was inspired and that its object was to let all the allied Governments and their peoples know that the President was convinced that the time had come for a new deal in allied management of the struggle against Germany.

The sensation is believed to give promise of being even greater, for the reason that the substance of the President's message to Colonel House will be published on the very day that Mr. Lloyd George will cross swords in the House of Commons with those critics who have been accused of attempting to bring about a Ministerial crisis over the Prime Minister's advocacy of an inter-allied war council.

Tomorrow will be a vital day in the Commons, and it is not doubted here that the President's attitude, as explained in the statement cabled from London, will play an imporant part in the debate. That the President has shown strong sympathy with the policy of the British Prime Minister to form an inter-allied war council is accepted here, and the opinion is expressed that it will have a marked bearing on the Parliamentary contest.

When the dispatch to Colonel House became known in Washington tonight it created an interest that has not been surpassed since the United States became a party to the greatest of conflicts. That the President very largely kept his own counsel in communicating this important instruction to Colonel House was indicated by the admission of one of the best known officials of the Government, who is usually informed of action by the President, that he had never heard of the message to Colonel House. Another official of prominence said:

"I doubt if the President sent a cable message to Colonel House, for the reason that the policy of the President had been discussed and was well understood before Colonel House left Washington. This policy had already been made known in a statement given out by Secretary Lansing. That statement is in accordance with the information contained in the dispatch from London as to the President's attitude."

Lansing's Statement of Nov. 8.

The statement of the Secretary of State to which reference was made was published in THE NEW YORK TIMES on Nov. 8. In announcing that Colonel House and others had been appointed by the President to represent the United States at the Allied War Conference to be held in Paris, Mr. Lansing made two statements that now obtain a greater significance in view of the President's message to Colonel House. These statements are as follows:

"The conference is essentially a war conference, with the object of perfecting a more complete co-ordination of the activities of the various nations engaged in the conflict and a more comprehensive understanding of their respective needs in order that the joint action of the co-belligerents may attain the highest war efficiency. * * *

"In looking forward to the assembling of the conference it cannot be too strongly emphasized that it is a war conference and nothing else, devoted to devising ways and means to intensify the efforts of the belligerents against Germany by complete co-operation under a general plan, and thus bring the conflict to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion."

There has been much discussion here as to the exact meaning of these expressions, which, of course, were authorized by President Wilson. Since criticism of Prime Minister Lloyd George was begun for his indorsement of the formation of an inter-allied war council the speculation has run along the lines of whether President Wilson was in accord with the proposal for a central council of war in which all the Allies would be represented, or merely intended this Government to take part in a conference which would map out a plan for mutual effort against Germany.

Some held that the Lansing statement was to be construed as upholding the proposal for an inter-allied council to manage the war, but by far the greater number contended that this interpretation was not justified. What was said tonight in the best informed quarters, taken in connection with President Wilson's message of instructions to Colonel House, is regarded as meaning that the President heartily approved the idea of the formation of an inter-allied war council.

Dissatisfied with Past Measures.

That the United States Government intends to insist on being consulted by all the Allies on matters pertaining to offensive action against Germany is believed here to be obvious from President Wilson's instructions to Colonel House. That the President is for unity in the control of military operations is equally obvious. It cannot be too emphatically stated that the President is in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war, and what is known of his uncompromising attitude in this connection indicates that he is dissatisfied with the measures that have been taken heretofore to combat Germany.

The military forces of the United States have not yet begun to fight on the soil of France, their participation up to this time having been confined to small bodies of troops obtaining instruction in trench warfare, and the belief is held here that before a real army of American soldiers takes its allotted place on the battle front the President will want to know exactly what measures have been provided to insure the best use of these forces in co-operation with those of Great Britain and France.

Greater significance is now attached to some remarks made last week by a high official when questioned by newspaper men concerning the announcement that Colonel House and other representatives of this Government had arrived in England to participate in the inter-allied war conference.

"It is obvious," he said in effect, "that the military successes of Germany have been due to the fact that there is unity of action between the Central Powers. Whatever military operations are carried out by Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria are directed from Berlin. The Allies have not had the advantage of this unity of control, and it seems to be apparent that they would benefit by a common plan of operations."

Now that the speculative element of the discussion as to the significance of American participation in the Inter-Allied War Conference at Paris has given way to a more definite understanding, gained from President Wilson's instructions to Colonel House, the meaning of comment made by officials of this Government is becoming apparent.

It cannot be said that any of the higher officials admitted that the United States was in favor of the formation of an interallied war council that would take over the management of the war, but what they said indicated that this Government was in sympathy with the establishment of some sort of permanent body in which all the Allies would be represented to map out plans for joint action against the Germans.

It has been a common remark in well-informed circles here that the United States would be obliged to take over a large share of the work of defeating Germany, and there has been a tendency recently, particularly since the German invasion of Italy, to consider as settled that the war would be prolonged. This prolongation, it has been suggested, would mean that the United States must be prepared to make heavy sacrifices to bring defeat to Germany. It is known that the President is determined that there shall be no slackening of American effort, and that he is willing to go to the limit of the country's ability in manufacture, money, and resources to accomplish the objects for which his Government entered the war.

He is keen for action, and there is reason to believe that his representatives in the Paris conference will insist not only upon unified conduct of the war among the Allies, but that the mutual plan of campaign shall contemplate forcing the fighting at every point. The President, it is said, is as emphatic in his desire for an intensely active naval co-operation among the Allies as he is for forcing the fighting on land.

SEES NEW TACTICS BY WILSON.

Is Shifting War Argument to Economies, Says Cologne Gazette.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Nov. 18.—Commenting on Colonel House's recent statement in London, the Cologne Gazette asks what are America's war aims and what are Wilson's real intentions in waging war against Germany, pointing out that these questions have been repeatedly asked and arguing that this is all the more important, as the greater part of the American citizens, according to reports, do not seem to be warlike enough for the President.

The paper says that the people must be inoculated with this spirit of war, and declares Colonel House in his recent statement in London talked in this manner to a group of English and American journalists, telling them of the necessity of democratizing Germany. The paper then gives the text of the statement, saying it is unnecessary to argue all the banalities House said about Governments, as government seems to succeed better in Germany than in America. It remarks on the changed tone of this and of Wilson's speech, as also of the press, as compared with some time ago, and says that in his Buffalo speech Wilson laid stress on Germany's industrial and economic strife with other nations, giving the Bagdad railway as an instance.

The paper points out the attention America is giving to the Alsace-Lorraine question and that of the iron ore districts, the assertion that this alone made it possible for Germany to continue the war, and the further insistence on the importance of the potash monopoly, which may become a world danger. The paper argues that these are new education methods employed by Wilson, "while he leaves House and other agents to toy with democracy." It says the people at home are being educated as to the economic danger Germany presents. "There is a swindle here and there. But if the aim is attained the people don't mind."

The paper says this is only proof of how hard it is to attain a war spirit in America.

CONDEMNS NORTHCLIFFE.

Thomas, Laborite, Says Press Dictatorship Is Threatened.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—J. H. Thomas, Labor M. P., speaking at Leicester today warned his hearers not to accept statements in Lord Northcliffe's letter to the Premier as reflecting American opinion. He said:

"Like Lord Northcliffe, I have been in America and have had an opportunity of gauging American opinion, and if labor counts for anything in America I claim to be a better judge of the situation than Lord Northcliffe."

Mr. Thomas added: "What puzzles and amazes me is the attempt by Northcliffe and others to belittle the great sacrifices made by this country for over three years. There is supposed to be a censorship in operation, and I understand the object of that censorship is to prevent anything being said or done that will be of value to the enemy. I should like to know whether the censor realizes to the full the effects of such statements as those of Northcliffe on the morale of our own people at a time when our men are facing the hell and horror of the front with prospects of another Winter campaign."

Mr. Thomas said that this was the kind of thing that was used by the enemy in order to spread dissension in the ranks of the Allies. The position to his mind was a very serious one because they found that somebody who, "refusing to take responsibility, believed his one special function was to make and unmake Governments, and if need be to drive the best elements in our public life into retirement because they would not play his game. If we are to have in this country another press dictatorship then it is time for labor to stand four square to it."

MANY WAR THRILLS ON A 'QUIET SECTOR'

Incessant Danger Disconcerts the Novices, but They Soon Get "Salted."

VETERANS INSPIRE POISE

Typical Conditions on the Belgian Front Which Parallel Those Where Americans Are.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 18.—The American Army has received its "baptism of blood" in a "quiet sector" of the French line, where it is now getting first-hand knowledge of the war. I have just spent three days on a "quiet sector" of the front in the Belgian lines. I will try to tell you as exactly as possible what a "quiet sector" means, and what are the sensations of one who is exposed as I was to enemy shell fire for the first time in his life.

In modern military parlance a "quiet sector" means a place where, for various reasons, no big scale infantry fighting is in progress or expected. It is generally a point where an advance by either side would be unproductive of subsequent tactical advantage, or else there are material difficulties to prevent infantry action in the shape of a deep ravine or a swollen river, or, in the case of the Belgian front, three-quarters of a mile of ground flooded during the Yser battle.

The first line trenches are generally far apart, 500 yards or more, though advance posts thrown out at intervals along the line are often within speaking distance of similar works opposite.

The trenches themselves are fairly comfortable. Their occupants have introduced from time to time such improvements as experience suggested. Shelters are concreted, so as to be dry and roomy, the trench walls are strengthened with wooden supports, and the floor of the trench is composed of corduroy wooden roadways or passerelles, as the French call them. Drainage conduits have been dug, and power stations installed to pump out surplus water, and even drive electric light plants.

There is little danger from bullets or shell fire, unless a shell makes a direct hit, as the back and front of the trenches have been built up to give excellent protection. Cooking arrangements have been perfected, and communications for men and supplies work smoothly.

Danger Behind the Lines

All that is the bright side. Now we come to the disagreeable features. In their passage through the villages behind the front the men have noticed ruined houses here and there on every side. Windows left unbroken have a crisscross lattice work of brown paper gummed on the side to diminish breakage by splinters and protect them against air concussion. If there is a little town nearby, the inhabitants live in cellars or in isolated, outlying barracks, on account of air raids. In the Belgian town of Furnes that is almost wholly the case.

On the same lines is another thing that struck me. I visited a school for orphaned or temporarily orphaned children established by the Belgian Queen. Each of the 300 inmates, whose ages range from 2 to 10 years, has a tiny gas mask hanging above his cot in the five barrack dormitories where they sleep, sixty in each. All have been drilled in the use of the masks, and all save the very smallest, who are masked by the nurses, know how to put them on the moment the alarm is given.

That is the life of the civil population four or five miles behind our "quiet sector." Suppose, then, that as far as the worst hardships of existence in the trenches are concerned our soldiers are not so badly off, there remains an enormous aggregate of "fatigue" or non-military work to be performed.

Undoubtedly on the Belgian front, where owing to the marshy nature of the soil all the trenches have to be built above ground instead of dug beneath, conditions are exceptionally onerous in this respect. To take one example, the trench system demands no less than 50,000,000 sacks of earth, which must be wholly renewed three or four times a year owing to the action of the elements. Imagine the extent of the work that means for every Belgian soldier, with the comparatively small army and limited sources of supply.

On the French front there is naturally less need for sandbags, but support posts and corduroy structures must be renewed, concrete shelters reconstructed by man-handled blocks of concrete weighing 200 pounds apiece, barbed wire strengthened or replaced and finally every piece of damage wrought by enemy shells must be repaired as quickly as possible. Remember, nine-tenths of this work must be done in darkness with innumerable obstacles to trip the unaccustomed or unwary and the ever present risk of shell or bullet to keep the nerves on edge.

As regards this matter of nerves, the presence of veteran French troops will be of the greatest service to the Americans. No one who has not visited the front can realize the tranquilizing effect of the utter indifference to danger displayed—and felt—by those who are thoroughly "salted." In a hotel where I spent the night, not one of a dozen Belgian, French, or British officers so much as looked up from his dinner or conversation when a sudden buzzing drone and a furious burst of cannonading announced that a flock of Gotha bomb planes was right above our heads. Similarly in the trenches themselves—they don't take unnecessary risks, but no one bothers about falling shells or bullets.

"If they hit you, they hit you, if they don't, they don't," is the general attitude. "In either case, why worry beforehand?" That sums up the whole question.

In the case of the Belgians, this courage is perhaps more natural and innate and less a product of custom or fatalism than elsewhere, owing to the quality of the present Belgian Army. Small as it is, the Belgian Army, man for man, is probably superior in courage and physique to any of the allied forces.

Here is the proof and reason: Fully nine-tenths of the men have "passed the death wire," that is, voluntarily risked electrocution in order to escape into Holland, across the Belgian frontier guarded by a triple barbed wire fence, whose central wire is "live." Impelled by hatred of the invaders, Belgian youths have made their way alone, or in small groups, through Holland into England, incidentally risking the myriad dangerous of all sea crossings, where many have perished by submarines, so as to return and fight for Belgium's freedom.

Only the best and bravest would dare that perilous adventure, only the strongest could surmount its myriad hardships. Yet they have come in steady streams, tens and tens of thousands, until the Belgian Army, reduced to a shattered remnant at the battle of the Yser, is now fully restored to strength, prepared and already beginning not only to hold all it can manage of the Flanders line, but to take its part with the French and British in active operations against the German positions on the hillcrests opposite.

Novices Get Many Thrills.

Even though comforted by the veterans' air of unconcern, one cannot escape an inward tremor when one goes forward as I did toward the advance posts. Shells pass overhead continuously, and high up in the sky comes the steady pop, pop, pop that betokens fighting aircraft.

You know the aircraft are too busy to worry about you, but you wish they would fight elsewhere. You know the shells aren't aimed at you, but at batteries hidden behind your trenches, whose staccato bark or duller bellow, according to their calibre, adds to the general uproar. The sound of a shell passing above is like that of a train just before it enters a subway station, followed by a heavy "whoop" as it explodes. It gets on your nerves and you duck your head instinctively.

Then, perhaps, somewhere ahead, just where the point for which you are bound appears to be situated, there is a sudden puff of black smoke in the air, perhaps fifty feet from the ground, followed by a bang and a prolonged whine. "Shrapnel," says one of the old hands, "just getting the range. They're probably going to land a few shells thereabouts before long."

All the time you are steadily approaching said thereabouts, and you wonder why on earth the last speaker takes the matter so calmly.

There is another puff of smoke, and another, and as you are now nearer, perhaps a stray shrapnel ball buzzes close to your ear, as it seems. Again you duck.

"Saluting your first shrapnel," says the old hand, smiling. "Never mind, everyone does it at the beginning."

Can Detect Shells Coming Near.

Then follows the same disquieting subway train rattle, horribly near this time, and a tremendous explosion throws up a column of smoke and mud perhaps fifty yards to your right. Pieces of shell buzz nastily overhead, and you are very uncomfortable, but none of the veterans seem to mind, so you hope it's all right. One of them says:

"Shells are never dangerous as long as you can hear them. The one you don't hear is the one that gets you. Anyway, when they burst in soft ground like this the pieces fly upward, instead of keeping low, as when the ground is hard. You just watch me. If a shell is coming too close, I can tell by the difference in the sound, and if there is real danger you'll see me go flat on my face mighty suddenly. You follow my example and do it quick and you'll be all right."

After that you feel better, though you still can't help ducking your head. If the shell fire gets really heavy you all dive into shelters, where you are safe from anything but direct hits. And so by degrees you get "salted" to danger.

There is always the risk of a stray bullet or a flying splinter, but it is not very great. Beyond that nothing but dirt hits you.

In any case, why worry beforehand? In that sentence lies the whole philosophy of the battlefront, as I learned it. Our first troops in line are learning it now, and all the hundreds of thousands or millions who will follow them must learn it also. It is a lesson that can only be learned by experience.

OPEN-AIR CAMP SERVICE.

AVIATION FIELD, MINEOLA, L. I., Nov. 18.—More than 3,000 members of the United States aviation squad and 1,000 civilians participated today in the first open-air religious service held at Aviation Field 2, which joins Camp Mills. The service was such a success that it probably will be repeated each Sunday morning, weather permitting.

The services were conducted by the Rev. Roy F. Duffield, Archdeacon of the Episcopal Diocese of Long Island. He brought along with him a male chorus of about forty voices, and fifty of the aviators joined in singing at the service. The band from the 146th Oregon Field Artillery attended.

EXHAUSTION ENDS BATTLE

Kremlin Defenders and Bolsheviki Reach Compromise—3,000 Casualties, Mostly Among Population.

By HAROLD WILLIAMS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Saturday, Nov. 17.—No bounds are set to the Russian sea and Russia is drifting and drifting. The elements are at work, and no one can guess when and how order will come out of chaos. Petrograd is outwardly quiet now and gloomily waiting for the return of light that will reveal the extent of destruction.

In Moscow, thank God, there is peace at last, after a week of horror. It is a poor peace—a peace of exhaustion and fear that means victory to neither side. The terms are that the Committee of Public Safety, which stood out for the Government, shall disperse, both sides shall cease firing, officers shall retain their arms, and the pupils of the officers' training schools shall retain those arms they need for training purposes, but shall surrender the rest, and prisoners on both sides shall be released.

I have seen a man who has been through the inferno, a member of the Moscow City Council, who came here to appeal for help. For four days he was besieged in the City Council Building, and at the risk of his life made his way through the Bolshevik lines to the railway station. According to his account, the real fighting began in Moscow on Saturday. The commander of the garrison, Colonel Riabtsov, at first did not believe in the seriousness of the Bolshevik rising and made insufficient preparations. A Committee of Public Safety was formed, including the City Council and other organizations.

On Saturday a force of the Bolshevik Military Revolutionary Committee seized the Kremlin, and were expelled by a small force of pupils of the officers' training schools, who in turn were killed by the Bolsheviki, these again being finally expelled by a larger Government force.

From Monday onwards the military operations were concentrated in the centre of the town. The Committee of Public Safety sat in the City Hall near the Kremlin and controlled the Kremlin and neighboring streets down to Arbat. The Government force consisted of about 3,000 pupils of the officers' training schools, a few officers and a hastily organized White Guard of students. They had three guns and a plentiful supply of rifles and cartridges and number of Maxims.

Of the 100,000 men of the Moscow garrison not more than 15,000 directly or indirectly supported the Bolsheviki. Most of the regiments sat tight in barracks. From Sunday on thousands of soldiers escaped from Moscow by train or on foot. The Bolsheviki Red Guard, composed mainly of boys from 12 to 18, and the Military Revolutionary Committee obtained the services of a few inferior officers. They had about fifteen field guns, from which they kept up a continuous bombardment from the Sharrow Hills and other points of vantage. Their firing was very bad, and for the most part the shells fell wide of their mark, smashing into private houses and killing peaceful citizens.

Up till Wednesday the number of killed and wounded was about 3,000, chiefly among the peaceful population. There was no means of collecting the dead and their bodies lay for days in doorways and on stairs. There was continual firing in many parts of the town from windows and roofs. The population, terrorized, was afraid to move. In the centre it was impossible to get provisions.

The National Hotel near the Kremlin, where there were a number of British and French visitors, was under fire and the upper part of the building was destroyed by a shell. The Mayor gave permission to people to take provisions from neighboring shops. The Consulate was out of the line of fire and apparently was not harmed.

On Tuesday shells began to fall on the City Hall and the Committee of Safety decided to move to the Kremlin. The pavement was torn up and a trench dug to insure a safe passage. The Kremlin, well defended by machine guns, manned by cadets and placed in the towers and along the walls and the citadel prepared to stand siege as in the Middle Ages. There was abundance of ammunition and supplies and it was estimated that the defenders could have held out for ten days. On Wednesday, however, the bombardment was fiercer than ever and concentrated on the Kremlin.

All this time the inhabitants had been living in a perfect hell, hardly daring to venture into the streets, deafened by the noise of the cannon, and unable to get sufficient supplies and provisions, except here and there in the quieter parts of the town. In every house the residents established a guard, often with barricades. In one quarter the Red Guard entered the houses and disarmed the defenders, but the reports of looting were greatly exaggerated. In the Sokolniki quarter a crowd began plundering a shop, but the disorder was checked by the Committee of Public Safety.

The City Council had poured out the supplies of spirits, and drunkenness observable among the Bolshevik soldiers and Red Guard was attributed to chance captures. Trains of provisions stood unloaded at stations until on Monday and Tuesday the Bolshevik committees on the outskirts began to unload them for their own use.

The committee made attempts to negotiate with the Military Revolutionary Committees, and on Monday night a truce was declared, which was broken by the latter. One of the Bolshevik leaders, Scheffer, came to the City Council pale with horror and asked to be arrested, as he could not endure the sight of the insane bloodshed.

On Wednesday, during the bombardment of the Kremlin, the Cathedral of the Assumption, with the famous tower of Ivan Veliky, was destroyed, and the Church of St. Basil took fire. This wanton destruction of national shrines, which even Napoleon had spared, seems to have stimulated both sides to a conclusion of peace. The fantastic Church of St. Basil is a priceless treasure, one of the wonders of Oriental architecture, and the Cathedral of the Assumption is the glory of the Kremlin.

The news will send a shudder throughout Russia. The sacrilege has shocked even one of the Bolshevik Ministers, Lunacharsky, whose first impulse was to resign, but who has now withdrawn his resignation and published an appeal to the people to preserve its national treasures. This after the looting of the Winter Palace and the bombardment of the shrines of Moscow. On all sides one hears the bitter cry, "Even the Germans would not have done this."

What are the prospects? The Bolsheviki have the power, but they are boycotted and overwhelmed with derision and abuse. The Novoya Zhizn still insists on the necessity of the Socialist bloc, including the Bolsheviki. The Social Revolutionaries and pro-war Menesheviki refuse to have anything to do with the Bolsheviki. Government departments are still on strike.

GERMANS SUSPECTED OF BLUFF ON FOOD

Allowances Indicate Gambling on Chances of Peace Before Spring, Danes Believe.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 18.—The view that the German authorities are pursuing a policy of bluff at the present time in granting food allowances considerably higher than are justified by the crops of the year is seemingly confirmed by the recent food debates in the Prussian Diet. It was stated in these debates that it probably would be necessary to reduce both the meat and bread rations March 1, in order to make the stocks last through.

The bread ration already has been reduced once, and the extent of the wheat and rye crops, it is considered, undoubtedly will necessitate another heavy reduction in the Spring. It was stated in the debates that the longer the reduction was postponed the more drastic would be the cut.

The laboring classes generally are complaining that the present potato allowance of a pound a day is inadequate, but it is said there is no prospect of the allowance being increased, as the surplus will be required for the feeding of animals, in order to keep alive through the Winter the indispensable minimum of cattle and swine, and also for the production of alcohol required for the army.

The food authorities, according to all information reaching here, appear to be gambling on the chances of peace before Spring, and now have set great hopes on the results of Russian and Italian developments.

JEWS AGAINST BOLSHEVIKI.

Maximalists Represent 'Dark Forces' of Russia, Bernstein Says.

Denouncing as false reports in the European and American newspapers that Jews were leading and supporting the Bolshevik movement in Russia, Herman Bernstein, in an address before the Institutional Synagogue, at the Mount Morris Theatre, in East 116th Street, declared yesterday that the attempt to associate the Jews with the Bolsheviki was merely another expression of anti-Semitic propaganda. Far from being the friends and leaders of the Bolsheviki, he said, the Jews of Russia were their avowed enemies, because the Maximalists included in their ranks representatives of the same "dark forces" that had always advocated the suppression of Jewish freedom.

Mr. Bernstein, who spent three months in Petrograd after the revolution and had seen the Maximalists at work, said their aim was to bring about utter destruction not only of the freedom of the Jews, but also the freedom of all Russia. The fact that there were seven or maybe ten Jews, including Trotzky, among the leaders of the party was not to be taken as an indication, according to Mr. Bernstein, that the Jews of Russia were supporting their efforts.

"In the first place," declared Mr. Bernstein, "these men are not Jews in the real sense of the word. They are not in the least sympathetic to Jewish culture or Jewish ideals. Most of them have been converted to other faiths, and the word Jew has no particular significance to them. The great body of Jews in Russia look upon these men, who were once of their faith, as enemies to the race. The Jews of Russia are no more proud of the Bolsheviki of Jewish descent, than the gentiles of Russia are proud of the Bolsheviki of the Christian faith."

GERMAN SHELL CUTS AMERICAN'S GUN IN TWO

Sergeant at the Front Knocked Down and Dazed, but Is Unhurt.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Nov. 18, (by The Associated Press.)—The experience of an American Sergeant in a support trench has demonstrated that a shell can go within a few inches of a man and not hurt him. Recently the Sergeant was standing back of the lines, holding his rifle out of the mud by the sling. Suddenly there was a rush of air and the rifle was almost pulled from his hand, followed by an explosion in the mud twenty yards in the rear.

The Sergeant was knocked down, and when he scrambled to his feet he discovered that the shell had clipped off the rifle stock, leaving only the barrel in his hand. The Sergeant has the remains of the weapon and a hazy recollection of remarking:

"Well, I'll be damned."

The site for the American military balloon school has been selected, and operations there will begin soon with balloons from the United States and some taken over from the French. The course of instruction will be complete and will be speeded up so that when the American army takes over its own battle front, American observation balloons will co-operate in the operations. A number of balloon officers already have been up at the front in French balloons observing the methods and the tricks of the game with which the French are familiar.

PLATTSBURG'S LAST WEEK.

Infantry Candidates to Have Administrative Work Instruction.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Nov. 18.—The last week of the intensive training begins tomorrow with administrative work for the infantry, such as making up reports, payrolls, courts-martial, issuance of supplies and clothing, &c. The field artillery will have shrapnel fire each morning until Wednesday, when it will take up administration work. By Saturday next all Government property will have been turned in at the Quartermaster's Department except that actually needed until the departure of the men from camp.

FINLAND TO BE REPUBLIC.

Independence to be Declared Today, London Hears.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—Oskari Tokoi, the Social Democratic leader in Finland, and former Finnish Premier, is expected to form a new Finnish Government on Monday, according to a Haparanda dispatch transmitted by the Exchange Telegraph correspondent at Copenhagen.

The Diet will proclaim Finland an independent republic on that day, the dispatch adds.

KERENSKY SOUGHT A TRUCE.

Berlin Paper Hears He and Lenine Effected a Compromise.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The Berlin Tageblatt declares that Premier Kerensky and Nikolai Lenine, leader of the Bolsheviki revolution in Petrograd, have affected a compromise essentially favorable to Lenine, the Exchange Telegraph correspondent at Copenhagen reports.

Kerensky, on Tuesday last, telegraphed from Gatchina proposing a truce and a parley, according to a belated dispatch filed in Petrograd Wednesday and forwarded via Haparanda. Kerensky's message was dated 9:20 P. M., Tuesday, Nov. 13, shortly before his disappearance. It read:

"Following the suggestion of the Committee for Saving the Country and the other democratic organizations united with it, I have stopped operations against the insurrectionary forces and propose to send Commissioner Stankevitch to enter into negotiations for taking measures to avoid useless bloodshed."

"Simultaneously, says the dispatch, there came a message from General Krasnoff, Commander of the Third Cavalry Corps, and in charge of the Kerensky forces, proposing that the Bolshevik troops be withdrawn to Petrograd, leaving only pickets in a neutral zone to be established between the opposing forces.

festo demanding the release of all political prisoners, the cessation of political terrorism, freedom of the press, the inviolability of the person and of property, and the placing of a sufficiently armed force at the disposal of the municipality to preserve order and prevent rioting, robbery, and violence.

The owners of apartments have organized themselves for the purpose of securing their homes nightly. The Maximalists proposed to pool all printing shops and reserves of paper. Food and forage are rapidly becoming exhausted owing to the destruction of the railroads and the general disorganization. Officials of the Finance Ministry have declined to hand over treasury funds to the Maximalists. The Director and Vice Director of the State Bank were arrested, but subsequently were released.

The Bolsheviki leaders are endeavoring to effect the resumption of operations by the various branches of the Government, most of which have been disorganized by strikes and the refusal of employes to work under the Bolsheviki commissaries.

The newspapers which were suppressed in the early days of the uprising have in some instances received permission to renew publication, although the status of the bourgeois press is still indefinite.

Sir George Buchanan, the British Minister, who was on the point of leaving for England, has now postponed his departure.

Gen. Dukhonin Assumes Command.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—A wireless dispatch from Petrograd today says that General Dukhonin of the Kerensky forces issued the following under date of November 14:

"In view of my ignorance of the place of residence of the Chief Commander, I have entered temporarily into the post of Chief Commander. I have directed the stoppage of the further dispatch of troops to Petrograd. At present only transports connected with the necessary military operations are permitted. I make this known for the guidance of all commanders, committees and commissaries."

Reuter's Petrograd correspondent telegraphing today says there has been a split among the Maximalists. The Ministers of the Interior, Agriculture and Supplies have resigned, holding that a formation of a coalition Socialist Government is essential. Several other Commissioners, says the correspondent, support their views. It is added that M. Zinovieff, associate of Nikolai Lenine, and M. Kameneff, Vice President of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, and three other members of the Maximalist Central Committee of the Petrograd Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, also have resigned for the same reason.

The Maximalist Commissioners have closed the Russo-Swedish frontier at Tornea, and no one is allowed to pass without special authorization from the Military Revolutionary Committee, the correspondent says, and continues:

"Hostilities have ceased in Moscow. Terms were signed whereby the so-called White Guard surrenders its arms, and the Committee on Public Safety dissolves.

"The Maximalists' conditions to consenting to a composite Socialist Government include control of the troops in the Petrograd and Moscow districts, and the systematic arming of workmen throughout Russia. General Verkhovski, Minister of War in the Kerensky Government, declines to join a Cabinet in which the Maximalists are represented. M. Neratoff, former Minister of Foreign Affairs, is in concealment after arranging for the security of copies of treaties with Russia's allies. The Maximalists have ordered his arrest and the recovery of the documents.

"It is reported that troops amounting to an army corps under orders of the army committees have reached Luga, en route to Petrograd to end civil war and the dictatorship of the Maximalists.

"The Ukraine Assembly has declared the independence of Ukraine.

"It is stated that the Cossacks supporting Premier Kerensky only numbered 300."

A dispatch from Haparanda, Sweden, dated yesterday, says:

"The Bolsheviki were still in complete military control of Petrograd when a correspondent of The Associated Press left the city Thursday morning on the last train proceeding to Tornea. At that time Petrograd was completely isolated from the rest of Russia by a railway and telegraph strike, called as a protest against the Bolshevik Government, the employes refusing to work until Lenine and Trotzky were eliminated and some peaceful arrangement reached.

"Up to Thursday morning no definite success had met the efforts of the Committee for the Salvation of the Revolution to bring about the organization of an all-Socialist Cabinet in which neither Kerensky nor Lenine would be included. M. Tchernoff, the Socialist ex-Minister of Agriculture, was mentioned as the probable Premier of this Cabinet.

"Though there have been many rumors of Bolsheviki outrages and cruelty, the truth appears to be that there has been no marked violence except against the military cadets, a score at least of whom were killed after their surrender. There had been no fighting in Petrograd since Sunday.

"Reports from Kiev and other large cities indicate that a new organized resistance against the Bolsheviki is being prepared.

"Reports from Sebastopol say that that city has been taken over by the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, and that the sailors of the fleet have taken an oath to support them.

"Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, the younger brother of the former Emperor, is said to have been at Gatchina with Kerensky."

Delayed dispatches from The Associated Press correspondent at Petrograd, under Monday's and Tuesday's dates, which have been received by courier at Stockholm, reveal the following regarding the situation in the capital at that time:

"The Bolsheviki, despite their successes, were far from having the united Soldiers' and Workmen's body behind them. This was demonstrated at the first session of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Congress, which, although it had been packed by the Bolsheviki, was marked by the ostentatious withdrawal of the Minimalist groups, after bitter attacks by their spokesmen. The Central Committee of the Peasants' Organization, which has never been in sympathy with the Leninites, has been further incensed by the arrest of M. Maslov, Minister of Agriculture, and M. Salaskin, Minister of Education, the peasants' representatives in the Kerensky Cabinet. These men were later released, but this action did not serve to propitiate the peasants.

An incident snowing that the Bolsheviki were not so sure of the united support of the fleet as they had supposed came when sailors from the destroyer Samson, exiled from Kronstadt by the Bolsheviki, sent a representative and afterward declared they had been deceived, as they had been summoned to defend the Soldiers' and Workmen's organization, but found they were expected to defend the Bolsheviki.

The Associated Press correspondent at Stockholm talked with an American business man, the manager of a concern in Petrograd employing a large staff, who had reached there yesterday after having left Petrograd on Wednesday morning. He reports that no foreigners in the city had been molested and that Nikolai Lenine said to a delegation of foreign diplomats who called on him at the Smolny Institute:

"Instructions have been given to treat foreigners with all consideration. They are guests of the Republic."

The American traveler characterized Lenine as a man desiring peace, but said that Leon Trotzky was using violent language and threatening all his opponents with death. He reported the city quiet except for the occasional killing of some military cadet or other youth whom the maddened revolutionaries mistook for a cadet. Comparatively little looting was reported. Some of the shops were open, including all those dealing in provisions. The Leninites were considering the search of all houses for stores of provisions and the confiscation of surplus stocks.

The traveler said it was unsafe for one to appear in the streets conspicuously well dressed. Elaborately dressed women, he reported, had repeatedly had their clothing torn from them by mobs on the thoroughfares, the members of which cried, "Our wives, sisters, and daughters are in rags." The Lenine adherents, however, he stated, were amply supplied with money, from German sources, he believed.

The correspondent's informant agreed with all the other observers with whom the correspondent had talked in the prediction that Kerensky would never regain power again even if his party should prevail. He is being accused by former supporters of lack of resolution and the energy to act months ago when the plans of the Bolsheviki could have been dealt with effectively at their very inception. The urban population as a whole was showing a singular apathy toward the current events.

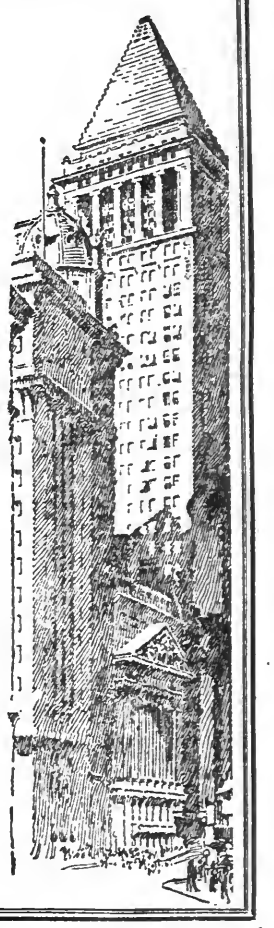
How a big business man insures his mother's financial independence



A MAN prominent in large business affairs both in this country and abroad has placed certain securities in trust with us for the benefit of his elderly mother, and from the income we send her a check regularly each month.

Although his business is unusually stable and conservative, he is unwilling to allow his mother's welfare to be subject to any contingencies. Whatever reverses he may encounter this trust fund will always maintain his mother in comfort.

To insure absolutely the safety of this fund, he has made the trust "irrevocable," that is, one which even he himself cannot alter. At his mother's death the fund will revert to him.

Is there someone whose income you want to assure? Our Trust Department officers will be glad to explain the simple method of doing this by a trust agreement.

NEWS FROM ITALY ENCOURAGES BAKER

Energy and Courage Shown in Stemming Teutón Assault, War Secretary Says.

PURPOSE OF THE INVASION

To Direct Attention from Defeats on Other Fronts — Americans in Trenches Uphold Traditions.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Secretary of War Baker, in his weekly review of military operations in Europe, issued tonight, says the American forces in the trenches in Europe have acquitted themselves, in a way worthy of the best traditions of the American Army.

The Secretary says that the news from Italy is more encouraging and that the Italian Army, although subjected to attack along four different lines, by which the enemy is endeavoring to outflank and crush the Italians, and in spite of the intense strain, is hardening its defense.

The text of the Secretary's statement follows.

"The training of our national army is now progressing rapidly. At all the camps the morale of our new citizen soldiers is reported as excellent. The men who have been called upon to defend our country in the present emergency are taking hold of the work in a serious, high-minded spirit which will produce the best result.

"The British and French officers who are to assist in instructing our new armies are arriving. They come for the purpose of initiating our men in the latest developments of modern warfare, so that from the very outset our forces may be trained according to the most efficient time and life saving methods.

"In France the training of our troops is likewise being carefully continued. In the sector where our forces are in the trenches they have shown themselves worthy of the best traditions of our armies.

German Reaction Slight.

"After the successes gained by the Allies in the West during the preceding week, the relative calm of the last seven-day period was to be anticipated. It is significant, however, that the reaction of the enemy has been relatively slight both in the region north of the Aisne and in Flanders. Five days elapsed before any hostile attempts were made to regain the ground recently won by the Canadians beyond Passchendaele, and this effort was repulsed without difficulty.

"At this season of the year the sodden, fog-bound fields of Flanders and the bad weather which prevails along the entire western front make it difficult to co-ordinate major operations with precision. Nevertheless, artillery preparation has continued in the two chief theatres of activity in the West, presaging further offensive engagements.

"Roulers, the ultimate objective, is now less than five miles distant, and from their positions on the heights of Passchendaele allied artillery fully commands the approaches to this pivotal position. Along other sectors of the front held by the British no engagements of importance are reported.

"Destructive hostile artillery fire is noted in the area along the Yser, centring around Dixmude, and the shelling by the enemy increased during the latter part of the week, betraying a decided nervousness on the part of the Germans lest any unexpected offensive action develop. Along the French front no engagements of importance are recorded. In Champagne and the Argonne artillery duels of especial intensity took place.

"In the Vosges the enemy launched an assault in the vicinity of the Hartmanns-Weilerkopf and temporarily gained a footing in the advanced French trenches, only to be driven out by a strong counterattack.

Better News from Italy.

"The news from Italy is more encouraging. Operations involving the skillful handling of large masses of troops and the reorganization of detensive positions, entailing superhuman efforts on the part of officers and men alike, have been carried out by the Italian armies with energy and courage.

"All sectors of the Italian theatre of operations continue the scene of much hard fighting. The enemy along four different lines of attack is endeavoring to outflank and, if possible, to crush the Italian armies and debouch into the heart of Northern Italy.

"While attempting to drive ahead across the Venetian plain along a broad front, the Austro-German forces have thrown large masses of troops against the Italian defensive positions girding the Trentino.

"In spite of the intense strain of the engagements, in which the Italinn rearguard acquitted themselves very well, the Italian defense is hardening. Along the Piave and in the region of the Lake of Garda, as well as along the Brenta, it would appear that the enemy, while securing local advantages, is being successfully restrained. On the lower Piave the hostile attempt to cross the river was partly successful, resulting in the capture of Zenson. The Italians have now opened the dikes in this sector, which will render the enemy advance difficult.

"While it must be acknowledged that the full Austro-German strength in the Trentino has not yet been employed, and developments in this sector must be awaited, nevertheless the present temper of the Italian armies and the strong allied reinforcements which are arriving smoothly and methodically in the Italian theatre should lead us to contemplate the future with confidence.

"A principal purpose of the German invasion of Italy was to divert the attention, primarily of their own people, of neutrals, and even of the Allies and ourselves, from the continued allied successes in the chief theatre of operations in the west, and particularly at this juncture from the uninterrupted series of defeats which the Turkish forces, commanded, led, and reinforced by Germans, have suffered at the hands of the British.

In Palestine and Mesopotamia.

"The military situation in Palestine and Mesopotamia must be considered if we are to arrive at a clear perspective of the progress of the war. In Palestine the British drive on Jerusalem is developing in a most satisfactory manner. The pursuit of the defeated Turkish forces continues. The British are in close contact with the fugitive armies and are administering an uninterrupted series of hard blows, which are having a marked effect.

"Cavalry is being used to good advantage in maintaining continuous contact with the enemy and in following up the successes of the main forces. In one engagement a single cavalry division, with only a portion of its effectives engaged, captured 1,100 prisoners, together with artillery and other material.

"The investment of Jerusalem from the west is beginning to assume well-defined proportions. The railroad line, including the junction of the Damascus-Beersheba road with that of the Jerusalem-Jaffa line, is now firmly in British hands.

"Jaffa, the principal seaport of Palestine, is now coming under the combined fire of the allied guns on land and sea. Its capture will greatly facilitate operations.

"The mobility of the British forces, and the rapidity of their offensive operations along the seacoast, which may result in the enveloping of Jerusalem from the northwest, are factors of immediate importance.

"The German higher command must now concentrate its effort in an attempt to stem the British advance, and this will probably relieve whatever hostile pressure it was proposed by the Germans to bring to bear against Bagdad. It is estimated that the Turkish forces operating in Palestine have lost one-half of their effective strength.

"In the Mesopotamian sector the British are also pursuing a successful forward movement. North of Tekrit the troops under the command of General Maude are sweeping the remnants of the Turkish troops before them and have reached a point some forty miles north of this centre, bringing the British outposts within approximately 100 miles of Mosul.

"In the Balkan war zone increased activity is noted. The British executed several raids in the Struma Valley, inflicting losses on the enemy. In the French sector artillery activity west of Lake Ochrida has increased in intensity. The enemy made several unsuccessful attacks on trenches held by the Italians.

"In Russia the situation continues disturbed."

A Peking despatch under Friday's date announced the resignation of Premier Tuan Chi-jui and his entire Cabinet and indicated the expectation that Hsu Shih-chang, Prime Minister under the administration of the late President Yuan Shih-kai, would be named Premier to form a coalition Cabinet in which South and Central China would be given representation.

FINLAND'S LOSSES DUE TO PANIC ABOARD

Survivor of Transport Attack Says Coolness Would Have Saved Lives of All.

CREW RUSHED TO BOATS

Nine Lost in Attempt to Leave the Ship—Harold Selick Describes Approach of Torpedo.

First-hand details of the attack made by a German submarine on the American transport Finland three weeks ago were brought to an Atlantic port yesterday by two young Americans, Harold Selick of Glen Ridge, N. J., and J. S. Foster, who arrived from England on a British steamship.

The young men had been serving a year with the 113th Regiment of the French Camion Corps hauling ammunition to the big guns at the front. After the United States entered the war they obtained their discharges from the French War Office and started back on the Finland to enlist in America. Selick explained that as they had only paid a small sum for their passage and as the crew was under the usual complement, he and his friend volunteered for duty in the deck department.

"I was assigned to duty as a lookout man," said Selick, "and was stationed in the upper crow's nest on the foremast on Sunday, Oct. 28, in the forenoon watch from 8 o'clock till noon. Before leaving a French port the crew had been told of the sinking of the American transport Antilles, and Captain Jensen warned the officers and men to keep a sharp lookout for submarines. The weather was clear, but there was a heavy sea running which men who had been on ships that were torpedoed before declared was not favorable for submarines to make an attack. We were about 210 miles out from port when the ship's position was taken at 8 A. M.

"At 9:35 I sighted a torpedo coming toward the ship on the starboard side at a speed of forty miles an hour, which flashed like a silver streak in the sun as it skipped through the tops of the waves like a dolphin. It was aimed to strike the ship just forward of the boiler room, and I sang out to the officer on the bridge at the same time that he had sighted the torpedo with his glasses. It struck me at the moment that when the Antilles was torpedoed in about the same place the explosion blew the foremast out of the ship and took the two lookout men in the upper and lower crow's nests with it.

"Just then the explosion came and rocked the Finland fore and aft. The foremost quivered and bent fore and aft, but it was a stout spar and did not break, for which I was very thankful. The converted steam yacht Alcedo, which I hear has since been sunk, was escorting the ship and closed in toward us while her crew stood by their guns, and the gunners on our ship did the same, watching for the submarine to appear on the surface. Some of the crew imagined that they did see two periscopes, but nothing was seen of the undersea craft by any of the officers or crew on the Alcedo or the officers and lookout men on the Finland who were stationed fore and aft.

"After the explosion there was a great deal of excitement on board and the crew rushed to the boats. As they were being lowered away some of the lifeboats were let go by the run and a number of men were thrown into the sea and drowned. Efforts were made to save them, but in the heavy sea is was very difficult, and they went down before help reached them.

"The Finland did not appear to have been seriously damaged, and after staying for two hours in the boats we returned to the ship.

"The examination made afterward by the Captain showed that the torpedo had struck the ship abaft the foremast, and exploded in a coal bunker on the starboard side with such force that it had blown out the plates in the hull on the port side opposite. That compartment was the only one which was filled with water. The Captain decided to head for the nearest French port, 125 miles away, which we reached at 11 o'clock that night."

Selick said that it was a sad business that so many of the crew had been drowned in their efforts to get away from the ship, because not a single person had been injured by the explosion of the torpedo.

According to the dispatch sent to the Navy Department at Washington by Admiral Sims, there were nine drowned after the attack on the Finland. Three of the men were members of the naval gun crew, four belonged to the regular ship's crew, and two were privates in the United States Army. A later dispatch from the Admiral stated that the officers of the Finland had remained on board, and it was evident that the crew had taken to the boats in the excitement following the explosion without waiting for orders from the bridge.

in character is that he is a destructionist rather than a constructionist. His nickname of "Cabinet Wrecker" is almost as well known as that of "The Old Tiger." I believe that this wrecking quality of his is just what is needed now. Clémenceau, with France behind him, as it indeed is, can start out boldly on the greatest wrecking expedition of even his amazing career—namely, the wrecking of Germany.

Premier's Devotion Unquestioned.

Clémenceau is a patriot. No one ever dared to doubt that. Every act of his life, even his acts of wrecking, has been for France. His aim has been to drive the incompetents from power.

He is now an old man, but unimpaired in every way for his final battle. He has kept out of every war Cabinet, although he could have had a place in all of them, but that might have impaired his destructive powers. Instead, he has kept his claws sharp and his teeth on edge in that little sanctum of L'Homme Enchainé in rue Taitbout, where he has torn more reputations to tatters than any other Frenchman of this generation. And almost always he has been right.

There may be cleverer politicians in France or more adroit ones. There may be more unblemished lives than his. But it is certain that there is no one more the real man with more force of character to carry through what he sets out to do.

Clémenceau has set out to wreck Germany, and it is a safe bet that he will win. In the few hours that he has been Premier he has proved that he also has real constructive ability. His plan of a war publicity bureau to take the place of the old-style censorship will certainly mean that the press from now on will be a fighting arm of the Allies instead of being treated like a muzzled alien.

L'HOMME LIBRE ONCE MORE.

Clemenceau Restores Original Title of His Newspaper.

PARIS, Nov. 18.—Georges Clémenceau's newspaper L'Homme Enchainé (the Chained Man) reappeared this morning under its original title, L'Homme Libre, (the Free Man.) His name beneath the title is now preceded by the word "founder," instead of "political director," as formerly, as he is no longer writing for the newspaper, now that he has become Premier.

Stephen Pichon, political editor of the Petit Journal, who has been appointed Foreign Minister in the new Clémenceau Cabinet, writes in a leave taking article addressed to his readers that Ministerial functions are always temporary, so he hopes some day to address them again. Therefore he says "au revoir" and not "good-by."

Charles Sergent has been appointed Under Secretary of Finance in the new Cabinet. M. Sergent was born in 1863. He was Assistant Governor of the Bank of France, which position he resigned to accepted the Under Secretaryship. He has undertaken many financial missions abroad since the beginning of the war, his latest being to Greece.

Deputy Léon Abrami has been appointed Under Secretary for Effectives and Pensions at the War Department.

M. Clémenceau changed the name of his newspaper early in the war, after it had been suspended because of his refusal to suppress certain passages of an article.

HAIG'S MEN OUST GERMAN RAIDERS

Counterattack Across the Open Expels Teutons from Trenches Entered in Thrust.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—Field Marshal Haig reports tonight the repulse of a strong German raid in Flanders, after the Germans had won a temporary success, entering the British line at certain points. Artillery activity of considerable intensity has been directed against the British positions in the neighborhood of Passchendaele and Langemarck. The official statement reads:

At dawn today a strong hostile raiding party attacked our trenches in the neighborhood of Gilliemont farm, southeast of Epéhy, and effected an entry at certain points. We counterattacked across the open and, after sharp fighting, ejected the enemy and captured a few prisoners.

The enemy also raided our trenches early this morning southeast of Havrincourt. Some of our men are missing.

On the battlefront the usual artillery activity continued on both sides.

The afternoon statement reads:

Early last night Lancashire and Highland troops successfully raided the enemy trenches in the neighborhood of Monchy-le-Preux, capturing a few prisoners.

The artillery activity on the battlefront continues on both sides. The enemy's artillery fire is directed principally upon our positions in the neighborhood of Passchendaele and Langemarck and south of Polygon Wood.

Artillery Fighting on the Meuse.

PARIS, Nov. 18.—The War Office statement on military operations issued today reads:

There was somewhat lively activity by our own and the enemy's artillery north of Chemin-des-Dames and on the right bank of the Meuse, (Verdun front.) A raid upon enemy posts at Mont Carnillet, (Champagne front,) resulted in our making prisoners. The night was calm elsewhere along the front.

The night announcement says:

The artillery activity was intermittent in the region of Vaudesson and near Schoenholz. It continued lively north of Hill 344, on the right bank of the Meuse.

Belgian communication: Last night the enemy violently bombarded our trenches around Dixmude. We replied vigorously against the preparation and no attack was delivered. During the last forty-eight hours the enemy activity has greatly slackened except in the regions of Merckem and Dixmude, where the artillery fire was very violent. We silenced several batteries.

Berlin Reports Repulse of French

BERLIN, Nov. 18, (via London.)—French forces attacked the German lines south of St. Quentin yesterday, but were repulsed in hand-to-hand fighting, Army Headquarters announced today. The official statement is:

Western War Theatre.—In Flanders the artillery duel continued within moderate limits.

In Artois and north of St. Quentin more than forty English were brought in, and several machine guns captured in successful reconnoitring engagements.

The strong artillery fire against the southern front of St. Quentin which had been increasing during the previous few days, was followed by a French thrust. The enemy was repulsed in hand-to-hand fighting, and lost men, who were taken prisoners.

GERMANS LAY BARRAGE ON THE BRITISH LINES

Enemy Blockhouse Taken at Night—Flanders Transport Difficulties Haig's Chief Anxiety.

By PHILIP GIBBS.

Copyright, 1917, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS' HEADQUARTERS, Nov. 18.—Along Goudberg apur to the left of Passchendaele some English and Scottish troops made a small attack Friday night and captured some valuable ground, together with the blockhouse of Vocation Farm with twenty-seven men.

It was like one of the old trench raids rather than an attack for the capture of ground. The men went over in the darkness without a barrage, creeping close to the blockhouse and rushing it before the German machine gunners could get their weapons into play. A relief was going on in the German lines at the time, the 4th Division being replaced by the 199th.

It seems possible that the enemy may make an attempt to recapture Passchendaele before the end of the year if his men have enough offensive spirit on this front, and if the conditions of the ground are to be relied upon for a serious attack. That is doubtful, but there is always the possibility that the German high command may insist on this and send an order to the divisional commanders, who prefer a defensive policy. In that case the attack would probably be delivered from the direction of Westroosebeke, to the north. The British guns are ready for all such attempts, and each of the counterattacks delivered up to now has been shattered near its assembly lines.

The enemy's batteries do not show any tendency to decrease on the Flanders front, and every day they lay heavy barrages on the British lines in such places as Inverness Copse, Polygon Wood, and Nun's Wood, while high-velocity guns are concentrated on Ypres, Hooge, Wiltje, and the old, bad places in the salient.

The British trouble this Winter will be the same as on the Somme last year. It will be the trouble of bringing up supplies to the lines and getting shelter and any decent comfort for the men in the front and support positions. As on the Somme, but worse than there, they now have behind them an eight-mile stretch of crater land over which their battles have been fought, so that it is a great desert of mangled earth with innumerable deep pits pierced by small explosions and filled with water, and its low ground, where the brooks have slopped over in the gullies between the slopes, a bog-land and lake-land in which one sinks to his armpits. Four miles of that ground is under heavy and continuous fire; another four miles of it is under scattered and harassing fire, and nowhere is there any cover except a few splinter-proof dugouts.

All through this coming Winter masses of men will have to take their turn in this grest Slough of Despond, of wet and cold, and the transport officers and "Q," that mystic letter which stands for all the organization of supplies, will not find it easy to provide them with the materials of life and war.

They will do it, but it will not be easy. They will do it by roads and tracks laid under fire, broken by shells, and laid again by fresh relays of men who work like soldier ants in all this muck heap, getting all the risks and none of the glory of war. They will do it by pack mules, heavily laden, but surefooted, among the shell craters and winding slowly in long single files across that blasted country where shells come with a scream down the wind and the earth vomits up blackly about these mud-splashed beasts. They will do it by ration parties, trudging up night after night in the black darkness, lightened only by the glare of gunfire, dodging shellbursts, stumbling and falling into shell pits, but getting there always—getting there if they have any luck. The transport drivers will take their wagons to the end of the last tracks, and unless their horses are killed or the drivers themselves hit, they will be at the dumps by the scheduled time.

"I give my men their orders and then don't worry," said one of the transport officers the other night. "I know if they are not all killed they will get the goods up all right."

BERLIN FEARS SEIZURES.

Believes Germans Here Will Lose All Their Property.

BERLIN, Nov. 18, (via London.)—There is apprehension here, through reports received from Washington by way of London, to the effect that the Trading With the Enemy act will be given its widest interpretation, and that its enforcement will result in the sequestration and confiscation of German property and private rights in the United States, as has already been done in England.

Outside of the law enacted in August last, prohibiting payments to the United States, the German Government, it is declared, has up to the present taken no steps to curtail the property rights of American citizens or corporation in Germany.

DUTCH LUGGERS SUNK.

Attacked by German Naval Forces —Crew of One Ship Lost.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 18.—A dispatch from Ymuiden says it is officially reported that a Dutch lugger has been sunk by German naval forces, one man being drowned and the remainder being taken to Wilhelmshaven.

It is also reported that the lugger Jacoba has been sunk and all her crew drowned.

ITALIANS DRIVE FOE ACROSS THE PIAVE

Italian armies. What his success would mean is fully realized, for should this wedge be driven through it would not only separate the two Italian armies, but would require the consideration of a retreat from the Piave, as it would not be possible to maintain a position on that river with the left flank thus menaced.

This explains the fiereeness of General von Krobatin's attack from the north, as he is staking all on getting behind the Italians' Piave line. But all his efforts have not succeeded in shaking the main line, although here and there it has moved back and forth slightly in the course of the violent fighting. At Monte Roncone the enemy's advance completely failed, while at Monte Tomatico he advanved a little. But these are all episodical fluctuations, as the main front holds.

General Armando Diaz, Commander in Chief of the Italian Army, was able last night to announce the solidity of both main fronts and to give merited tribute to his men. While the situation is thus satisfactory in that his first onslaughts have been repulsed, there is no delusion that the enemy will abandon his design, of advancing on the Venetian plains. The fighting, while desperate, has not yet developed the enemy's full power, and it is still to be shown where he will strike his greatest blow. But his first shock has been met and checked, and the Italian arms have gained new lustre.

Allied Naval Guns Aid Defense.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ITALIAN ARMY IN NORTHERN ITALY, Nov. 16, (Delayed.)—After five days of heavy shellfire, covering their advance with storming parties at chosen points, the Austro-Germans have not been able to pass the Piave River in force, but are held there by the desperate resisting force developed by the reorganized Italian Army.

The chief scenes of action are on the lower Piave, where Col. Gen. Borovich's Austrians have their left under the fire of Italian and allied naval guns at the mouth of the Piave, their right under bombardment by Italian batteries, and their front faced with fifteen miles of inundated country. Further up, on the middle Piave, the Austrians who succeeded in getting a foothold on the west bank near Zenson are crowded down to the water's edge. The invaders here have scant food and munitions, and have been unable thus far to bring over reinforcements from the east bank. All their attempts to float a pontoon bridge have failed under the enfilading fire of the Italian guns on both of their flanks.

A trusted man was sent by The Associated Press correspondent in an automobile to the Lower Piave this morning to inspect the inundated district, and he has returned with details of the fearful scene of desolation made by the release of the flood waters by the Italian engineers to bar the progress of the enemy.

What was a smiling farmland ten days ago is now transformed into a vast sheet of water, stretching for miles. Above the level of the water, roofs and the upper stories of farmhouses can be seen here and there. Great flocks of sea fowl have come in from the Adriatic, and their mournful cries add to the weirdness of the scene.

Intense silence hangs over the desolate waste, broken only by the sea birds and the muttering of guns at the mouth of the river. Some of the upper floors of the farmhouses are still occupied by the local consolatory of the valley.

The extent of water interposes an impassable defense to any advance of the enemy in that quarter, and under this sheet of water is soft mud, now soaked to quicksand, about six feet deep, making it impossible for enemy artillery or horses to enter without sinking. The first party which got across has been forced back, and is now held at bay by the flood.

VENICE SHOWS FORTITUDE.

Citizens Encouraged by Orlando's Visit and News from the Front.

VENICE, Nov. 17.—(Delayed.)—The city has taken on new confidence and hope with the visit of Premier Orlando, who personally gave directions for the protection and succor of the population, and who noted during a tour throughout the city the calm fortitude with which the inhabitants awaited events. The Premier expressed surprise at the dignity and tranquillity with which the people remaining in Venice faced their peril. Besides a considerable number of citizens and poor people, these include the Mayor, Count Grimani, the City Assessor and all the members of the Municipal Council.

The famous Church of St. Mark continues open, and frequent masses are attended by crowds of women and children who offer prayers for the preservation of the city. The aspect of the church has been completely changed, and now it resembles a fortress, with its mosaic decorations along the front covered by layers of bags filled with earth and all the art treasures in the interior of the edifice similarly protected.

The streets of Venice still present an appearance of animation, with a number of townspeople going about their duties. The Premier was acclaimed as he passed along the streets on his way to the Municipal Council, where he gave orders for the continued and adequate provisioning of the city with coal, bread and all other necessaries.

There was a touching scene last night at a street gathering when the day's war bulletin arrived, announcing that the Italians were holding their ground on the Piave. More than a thousand persons crowded up to hear the bulletin, and Count Nicola Zavagli, attached to the Captaincy of the Port, mounted a chair and read the good news to the eager throng. There were murmurs and cries as the people realized that the line was holding, and as the Count concluded reading a great shout fairly shook St. Mark's with "Long live the army! Long live the Allies! Long live Venice!"

DESPERATE FIGHTING IN ITALY.

Austrians, Heavily Reinforced, Menace the Upper Piave Line.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18. — Further details of yesterday's terrific fighting on the Italian front are given in a cable dispatch received today by the Italian Embassy.

"The enemy offensive is in full development," said the dispatch. "Violent infantry attacks follow one another incessantly, supported by very intense artillery fire. The Austrians are constantly bringing up reserves, and with desperate tenacity they are trying to break through our lines and menace our organizations along the upper Piave.

"The valiant resistance of the Italian army has rapidly brought the military situation to the phase of active reaction in all sectors of the front. Innumerable are the episodes of heroism on the part of our soldiers. Very frequently the enemy is repulsed in bayonet counterthrusts.

"Yesterday afternoon, after a formidable bombardment which had lasted since early that morning, an entire enemy regiment attacked our positions at Meletta d'Avanti and Val Nieta, in the direction of Monte Fior. This powerful attack was met by inferior units of our Regina Brigade, who repeatedly repulsed the enemy, inflicting upon him very severe losses.

"Toward dusk an enemy battalion delivered three furious assaults against our positions on Monte Tondarecar, but here also the Austro-Germans were sanguinarily repulsed by the Alpini Marmolada after a hand-to-hand fight lasting several hours.

"However, the greatest glory of yesterday's fighting was won by the Como Brigade. After terrific bombardment with guns of all calibres large enemy forces attacked the slopes of Monte Coriella, at the junction of Quero di Piave. The soldiers of the Como Brigade defended stubbornly the positions which they occupied, and for six consecutive hours with indomitable valor counterattacked the enemy until, near Malga le Fratte, detachments of Alpini, native of that region, with tremendous impetus reconquered the village which had been momentarily occupied by the enemy, and put the Austro-Germans to disorderly retreat.

"In the meantime all the attempts of the adversary to cross the Piave were systematically frustrated."

To depositors:

The importance of "being known"

BUSINESS men who succeed in establishing a lasting banking connection which is financially sound, at the same time personally agreeable, are fortunate.

For this reason:

A Trust Company or Bank usually prefers to extend accommodation to depositors whom it has known for a long time.

Those seeking a permanent banking connection will find the financial responsibility of the Columbia Trust Company covered by its capital, surplus, and undivided profits fund of $11,000,000. the remarkable spread of business reading

The habit of business reading has spread among Americans. Today it is estimated that not more than 10% of the better class of business men neglect utilitarian literature.

An article in Publishers' Weekly shows that J. P. Morgan & Company has a library of 6,000 business books; the National City Bank 20,000 volumes and 400,000 indexed pamphlets of commercial lore; the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company 19,000 such works. Brentano's issues a 128-page catalog of business books. The literature is so voluminous that, like law matter, it has its current digest, published at frequent intervals by the Cumulative Digest Corporation of New York. The chief topic of discussion at the recent national convention of librarians in Louisville was keeping up with the big demand for business books.

The successful business man of 1890 was "too busy" to bother with commercial reading. Now he cannot afford to slight it.

The A. W. Shaw Company is the largest publisher of this type of reading in the world. It has distributed over two million volumes. It has 41 new books in preparation, employing a small brigade of authors, investigators, statisticians, field men, and an ultra-"finicky" breed of proofreader this labor develops. The company publishes, in addition, four business magazines: SYSTEM, British SYSTEM, SYSTEM ON THE FARM, and FACTORY.

WAR AT A DEADLOCK, M'CORMICK'S VIEW

Illinois Congressman Declares Neither Germans Nor Allies Are Winning It.

NEEDS ALL OUR ENERGY

Thinks Victory Depends Upon Keeping American Industries at Maximum of Production.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Representative Medill McCormick of Illinois, who recently returned from a visit to the battlefields abroad, said today that the issues of the great world conflict would not be decided on the battlefields, but in the United States by keeping up industry here to the maximum of production and by the perfection of the American armed forces.

Mr. McCormick spent two months studying the war in Europe, visiting the British, French, and Italian fronts and the American camp in France. He conferred with the rulers of France, England, and Italy and with the commanding Generals of the great allied armies.

"The Germans are not winning this war," asserted the Congressman, and then added significantly: "Neither are we. The war today presents a stalemate from which we are unable to extricate ourselves because of the collapse of Russia and the unreadiness of the United States.

"Nowhere in Europe did I find an informed soldier or public man who believed that a military decision could be achieved before 1919, when the United States might be ready to add effectively to the sum of pressure upon the Central Empires. Perhaps economic conditions or political events in Germany may induce peace before that time, but, although Germany is suffering progressively more than her western enemies, her autocratic machinery and her economic reserves seem altogether adequate to hold her together through two more Winters.

Russia Hopeless.

"There is practically no hope," Mr. McCormick said, "that Russia can be in any sense useful during the year 1918. From the most responsible people I heard a disheartening tale of Russian inefficiency, corruption, incendiarism, and murder. Russia is so disordered that she cannot make war. Happily, in all probability, neither can she make peace. Germany might propose concessions and indemnities in the west and recoup herself in the east. What would the European democracies do under these circumstances? The principal public men with whom I talked were not certain and were not all agreed upon the answer to that question. Some who personally would oppose such terms believe that European public opinion would demand their acceptance, although that would involve an addition of 30,000,000 Poles, Lithuanians, and Livonians to the population of the Teutonic empires as well as the industrial resources and the great alluvial plain of Poland. The German autocracy would be fortified.

"With a wonderful energy, with a foresight which compels admiration, the autocracy has mobilized the power of Germany—children, women, men, food and clothing, metals and fuels. The German military machine made ready first, and, of course, as the neutral markets have been closed tighter and tighter with the tightening of the blockade, the resources of the Central Empires have been energetically spent. They are bleeding terribly, showing a steady diminution in man power and metal as compared with their French and English adversaries, and this in spite of the Russian collapse.

"But since the German High Command controls all the Central Powers from the Bosporus to the Baltic, they act with greater energy, unity, and skill than their enemies. Thus they made a seemingly successful drive into Italy. If the German command hoped for a true military success, certainly they did not believe they would achieve it. The real object of their political foray into Venetia was partly to make camouflage on a great scale to conceal their steady losses from Verdun to Passchendaele, and partly to provoke revolution in Italy."

Italians Expected It.

The German rush into Italy was not unexpected by the Italian commanders, according to Mr. McCormick.

"While I was in the now conquered Italian territory a little while ago," he said, "the Italian command expected an attack, in the neighborhood of Asiago. The Italians were under gunned, neither had they enough ammunition. The margin of subsistence in the country is so narrow that it must affect the morale of the population. But even so, the Italians would not have been driven back so far as they were if two or three divisions holding an almost impregnable point, debauched by the excellent spy system of the Germans, had not thrown down their arms. The Italians had defeated the Austrians. It was German divisions with artillery from the eastern and the western fronts, which restored the morale of the Austro-Hungarian troops and themselves led the successful thrust.

"The French and English," the Congressman said, "have a moderate preponderance in guns and man for man they outfight the Germans. All of the German class of next year's boys of seventeen are in the army and many of sixteen, whose tear-stained faces among the prisoners wrench the hearts of the Tommies and the Poilus who show them a shy, tender and clumsy kindness.

"Plainly the German resources in men and material are running low. While there are still excellent German divisions in Flanders, there was an appreciable diminution in the morale and the personal quality of the German troops on the French and British fronts, during the ten weeks in which I was in Europe. Germany everywhere had lost the offensive.

"At the battle of the Chemin des Dames, which was the greatest artillery bombardment the French have made, I had the good fortune to witness a perfect operation. The German batteries were so drenched with fire that they were unable to reply. With almost mathematical exactness, the French took the terrain which they had planned to take weeks before. Hundreds of miles of track, scores of trainloads of ammunition, hundreds and hundreds of heavy guns were employed to wreck the enemy defenses, to overwhelm and to kill the enemy before the advance was made, so, at last, when the French infantry went forward they did so with unbelievably small losses. There I witnessed the demonstration of what I had learned from the lips of the most distinguished French Generals during my wanderings along the front. This is an artillery and industrial war. That must never be forgotten."

Must Have Big Guns.

Mr. McCormick does not want the public to lose sight of the fact that shipping is necessary before anything else, because vessels must carry to France the engines of destruction.

"But above all," he said emphatically, "heavy guns are necessary—heavy guns, with their obvious complement of aircraft and rail transportation, but heavy guns, and still more heavy guns; twenty-five thousand cannon to be made in American factories and shipped to France before March 1, 1919. Time is the essence of victory, and great guns offer the only means by which it can be won. The more great guns, the fewer lives lost; the more great guns the surer the victory; the more great guns, the smaller the price we pay for our present unreadiness.

"The issue of this war will be decided not on the Isonzo or the Piave; not on the Meuse or the Rhine, but in Washington, and by the furnaces of America."

Referring to recent statements on American effort by Lord Northcliffe, head of the British War Mission, Mr. McCormick said:

"I very much admire Lord Northcliffe, but in his eagerness to shock Britain to further efforts he has painted a partial picture of American effort, which if it be taken as a faithful reflection of the whole is likely to endanger our common cause. This war must be won if we are to win, by the manufacture in America of thousands of engines of war. Men cannot win the war. The splendid little American army which already has crossed the seas rendered a great service when the echo of the first American feet upon the soil of France carried to every home which has sacrificed, (and almost all French homes have sacrificed,) the promise that the strength and still more the industrial genius of America would bring succor to France.

"France is fighting with heroic and dogged courage. Her steady, thoughtful soldiery are ready to spend their blood and to die, in the belief that America will forge the weapons to win the war. They must not be mistaken. One of the greatest of French Generals—perhaps the greatest—with the burden of the long front upon his shoulders said to me:

"'We cannot hope to have a vast army in France next year, but America, whose furnaces can forge as much steel as the furnaces of all Europe, can produce the cannon—25,000 cannon.'"

In conclusion the Congressman said: "I say very respectfully, but very earnestly, that to make that contribution to victory; that in order to make guns that lives may be saved, we must have greater co-ordination of effort than we now have. We must have more powerful direction, greater unity of effort, a true war council such as does not exist in Washington—a council of men who, irrespective of faction and party, represent in the greatest degree the energy and the genius of America.

"We must bend all our energies to make the great industrial effort in time. It will be fruitless if we are ready—too late."

PREDICT 3 YEARS OF WAR.

Americans Report Commanders Don't Expect Peace Till 1920.

Americans who returned yesterday to an Atlantic port from the French front via England on a British liner said that officials of the Allies in Paris frankly expressed the opinion that while there was no change in their views as to the defeat of the Central Powers it would take a long time to finish the war. If Russia and Italy had held out, they said, there would have been a good possibility of peace in the Fall of 1918, but since the retreat of these armies in face of the Teutonic forces the most optimistic of the millitary commanders did not see any chance for peace with victory before the Summer of 1920.

Among the passengers on the liner was Captain William Marshall of the Royal Naval Reserve, who has come over on a special mission for the Admiralty. He has been engaged in the North Sea for the last two years fighting submarines. He won the Distinguished Service Order for sinking four undersea craft, and has done some valuable work in mine sweeping.

Among sixty ambulance drivers who returned on the ship were Laurence B. Stoddart, Jr., and G. Parker Toms, who took part in the recent French drive in the Chemin des Dames on the Aisne front. In the attack, they said, the French used 6,000 guns. Toms, who comes from St. Louis, wore the French War Cross, which he won after six weeks' service at the front. He was badly gassed after picking up some French wounded, and has not entirely recovered.

Stoddart is the son of Laurence B. Stoddart of Bowring & Co., ship owners, of 17 Battery Place. He returned to apply for a commission in the British Army in Canada, as his father is an Englishman, and he was too young to join on the other side.

Another passenger was Lieut. Commander Frank Davis of the British Naval Air Service, who has been sent over to give instruction to American aviation students in hydroaeroplane tactics.

Henry C. Woods, the author of several works on Eastern Europe, arrived to deliver a series of lectures on the Balkan situation.

PRESIDENT THANKS THE FOUR-MINUTE MEN

Tells Theatre Speakers They Apprise the Nation of the Justice of Its Cause.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18. — President Wilson, in a letter which was given out at the White House tonight, expresses his appreciation of the patriotic work being done by the Four-Minute Men, a Government agency of 15,000 volunteer speakers who present wartime messages of the Administration to theatre audiences throughout the country.

"May I not express my very real interest in the vigorous and intelligent work your organization is doing in connection with the Committee on Public Information," said the President's letter. "It is surely a matter worthy of sincere appreciation that a body of thoughtful citizens, with the hearty cooperation of the managers of moving-picture theatres, are engaged in the presentation and discussion of the purposes and measures of these critical days.

"Men and nations are at their worst or at their best in any great struggle. The spoken word may light the fires of passion and unreason or it may inspire to highest action and noblest sacrifice a nation of free men. Upon you four-minute men, who are charged with a special duty and enjoy a special privilege in the command of your audiences, will rest in a considerable degree, the task of arousing and informing the great body of our people, so that when the record of these days is complete we shall read page for page with the deeds of army and navy the story of the unity, the spirit of sacrifice, the unceasing labors, the high courage of the men and women at home who held unbroken the inner lines. My best wishes and continuing interest are with you in your work as part of the Reserve Officer Corps in a nation thrice armed because through your efforts it knows better the justice of its cause and the value of what it defends."

TAFT ANSWERS LA FOLLETTE

Calls on All Republicans to Stand Behind Wilson.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18. — Former President Taft, speaking here today at a mass meeting in the interest of the Y. M. C. A. $35,000,000 war fund, reviewed the causes of America's entry into the war, called upon all Republicans to stand behind President Wilson, and took issue with Senator La Follette on the sinking of the Lusitania.

"The Lusitania case," said Mr. Taft, "can't be distinguished from the landing of a Hun regiment on these shores and the shooting into American homes and the killing of American citizens, but Senator La Follette said that the right to be on those decks under those conditions was a mere technical right.

"Now, what Senator in the Congress of the United States can speak of the right of those poor victims of foreign aggression, foreign cruelty, to have their lives preserved as a technical right?

"Suppose this had been Venezuela that had sunk one of our American vessels and sent fifty of our American citizens to the bottom. It wouldn't have been long before the President and the Secretary of the Navy formulated a demand peremptory in character and possibly accompanied by a battleship and every man, woman, and child in the country, pacifists and Senator La Follette, would have approved that action demanding reparation and security against further murder of American citizens.

"Now what is the difference? There isn't any except one, and that is that Germany is the greatest military nation in the world and Venezuela isn't."

NO PIGTAIL, SAYS T.R., FOR YOUR UNCLE SAM

Colonel Tells Upton Soldiers China Is a Natural Result of Pacifism.

PRAISE FOR NEGRO TROOPS

Draws Cheers for General Bell and Tells of Pride In the National Army.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMP UPTON, YAPHANK, L. I., Nov. 18.—Speaking to two great meetings of soldiers at Camp Upton this afternoon, Colonel Roosevelt preached two military sermons on preparedness, antipacifism, universal service, square deal to negro troops, and praise to the men of the national army. The first address was delivered in the new Y. M. C. A. auditorium to 3,500 men of the 305th Field Artillery and the 302d Engineers, and the second to 1,200 men of the 367th negro infantry at the Knights of Columbus Hall.

"The greatest universities in America are the training camps presided over by professors of the type of Major Gen. Bell," Colonel Roosevelt declared. The full half minute of applause that followed was an obvious tribute to the Division Commander who was seated on the platform.

The Colonel came to the camp on the invitation of Colonel Frederick C. Doyle and Lieut. Col. Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War in the Roosevelt Cabinet, both of the 305th Field Artillery, and Colonel C. O. Sherrill of the 302d Engineers. He was introduced by Major Gen. Bell. His speech to the negro soldiers was made at his own request.

"I have come here in a sense to address you, but more really to pay my homage to you and those like you, for it is you and those like you, you comrades of the American Army, to whom all our citizens owe most at this time. You are the men pre-eminently entitled to honor of all the men in this country at this time, and words count very little when we are about to wake the guns that have no doubts.

"You stand up when 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is sung, not because of men who previously sang it, but because of the men who stood the bombardment through the night—for the man who stood up to the killing and did the killing when the need came. That is why you are proud to be Americans now. Talking amounts to less than nothing, save just to the degree in which it is turned into action, and in this country of ours the man who is not only ready to fight for it, but to fit himself to fight for it, the man who has not raised himself to be a soldier, and the woman who has not raised her boy to be a soldier for the right; neither one of them is entitled to citizenship in this Republic. Universal suffrage, to justify itself, must be based on universal service. It is only you and your kind who have the absolutely clear title to the management of this Republic. It is only the man willing, when the need arises, to fight for the nation and to die for the nation—it is only these who are really entitled to have a voice in the halls of the nation.

"We have heard a good deal, General Bell, about conscientious objectors. We here, all of us, are Americans, and nothing else. I do not care a snap of my finger where the man was born, where his parents were born, any more than I care what creed he professes, but there is one thing that I do care for, and that is loyalty to the flag. I have no use for the man of fifty-fifty allegiance.

"I want you to remember this, that before we finally entered the war the number of innocent noncombatants sunk by German submarines surpassed in number the total number of deaths of both the Union and Confederate sailors during the four years of the civil war. I would like each friend, the professional pacifist, to remember that they are the people who called 'Peace, Peace' when there was no peace. They are the people that wish this nation to go on the theory that if we are only harmless enough nobody would hurt us. After the Lusitania was sunk I read how in the Queenstown morgue our American women lay dead, still clasping in their stiff arms the dead babies they died trying to save, and I read of the great exultation in Germany over the dead and the striking of medals to commemorate the deed.

"The nation that won't fight when its women and children are killed stands on a level with the man who won't fight when his wife is knocked down or his daughter kidnapped. What do you think of the man, who, when his wife's face is slapped, says she ought not to have been on the streets.

"If this man is worth while at all he will kick the one who did it, and if not he will get kicked in the end. The nation that gets in a corresponding position and does not act will also get kicked in the end. You can be sure of this. At this moment, if our pacifist friends who look across the water at the great, populous nation of China they will see what the policy of non-resistance in the end brings a nation to. It is a nation of great natural resources, but its mothers have for many years (and its fathers for that matter, too) refused to bring up their boys to be soldiers, and in consequence, at this time, half of the territory of China is under the control of alien nations, and in the remaining half the settlement of the destinies of China rests with other peoples, and not in the hands of the Chinese themselves. Now do not forget that every man who talks against this war at this time is trying to put a pigtail on Uncle Sam."

SPARTANBURG MEN TO DEFEND TRENCH

Two Thousand New Yorkers to Spend Tonight Under Strict War Conditions.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMP WADSWORTH, SPARTANBURG, S. C., Nov. 18.—The first contingent of New York's former National Guard will creep into the trenches tomorrow night to get acquainted with conditions which are to be a part of their daily life at some future time. Scheduled to spend twelve hours of watchfulness in the trenches, about 2,000 men from the 105th Infantry will be under the strictest sort of discipline.

At 6:45 o'clock the First and Second Battalions of the 105th will be instructed to prepare for trench duty. Allowing them fifteen minutes in which to get ready, the soldiers will march from their regimental site over the trenches built into the sides of three small hills. Sentry lines will be established, and no officers or men without special permits from Brig. Gen. Phillips will be allowed anywhere near the "front."

The soldiers will be required to crawl forward on the entrances to the communicating trenches. A few will be stationed in the third line of ditches, more will drop down into the second line, while the majority will settle into the first line. The trenches are of regulation dimensions, with rests for rifle firing and many single and double machine gun emplacements. No machine guns, however, will go into action tomorrow night.

Major Arthur L. Howe, signal officer, will be in charge of communications and he has installed an intricate system of telegraph and telephone lines. Because every man will be working as though he were under heavy fire, all orders will be transmitted over the wires.

Catholic Church Dedicated.

The Catholic Church of St. Nicholas of Tolentine, at Flushing Avenue and Union Turnpike, Flushing, was dedicated yesterday as the only church conducted by the Augustinian Fathers of Philadelphia in the Long Island diocese. Rev. Father Charles M. Driscoll, provincial, celebrated solemn high mass. Mishop McDonnell of Brooklyn presided and Father John F. Kennedy, the rector, entertained a large party of Catholic clergymen after the ceremony.

HOPE AMERICA WILL AID GREEKS IN ASIA MINOR

Minister Roussos Declares That Oppressed People Place Reliance in This Nation.

First-hand stories of the sufferings of the Greek population of Asia Minor under Turkish persecution, a fervent tribute to the works of American philanthropy among the nations suffering by the war, and a veiled intimation by G. Roussos, the Greek Minister to the United States, that the Greeks subjected to Turkey expected the influence of this country to be used for their reunion with their fellow countrymen, were the features of a mass meeting held yesterday afternoon at the Amsterdam Opera House by the Relief Committee for Greeks in Asia Minor. It was the first public gathering brought together by this organization; and about $1,000 was subscribed in cash and several thousand more in pledges.

Mr. Roussos had praised the works of American benevolence, and told of the pathetic reliance placed on America for alleviation of the sufferings of the Greeks under Turkish rule. "But are you going to stop at relief?" he asked. "I hope not, because if this were the only object of your program it would be better to let them end their lives of misery and martyrdom. It would not be human to allow them to live under such an odious yoke in future.

"The loud voice of the United States, when, entering the war, she promised liberty to all the oppressed nationalities, reached them, breaking through the distant spaces. They have heard in the depths of these distant lands the noble and generous voice of your country. They believe in America as their redeemer, and their sufferings seem to them much lighter because they are confident in the outcome of this world-wide war, and in the promise made by the United States.

"When the day of victory shall arise, America will hear from those distant countries the voices of all these martyrs imploring the Almighty for the prosperity and greatness of the United States, who by their unselfish intervention will secure liberty to the world."

Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, President of Cornell University and Honorary Chairman of the Committee, who was Minister to Greece from this country during the Balkan wars, presided. He referred to Eleutherios Venizelos as "the greatest modern statesman," and praised the ideals of Greek foreign policy in both of the conflicts which preceded the war of 1914.

Henry Morgenthau, former Ambassador to Turkey, told of the treatment of Greeks, Armenians, and other subject nationalities by the Turks, and said that the death from starvation of many of the Christian population who had been deported and maltreated was inevitable unless relief were speedily sent.

Mr. Roussos said that before the war influential Greeks of Asia Minor occasionally disappeared without leaving a trace, but that since the war began a general extermination had been decided on by the Turkish authorities.

SAYS HILLQUIT GOT BIG REPUBLICAN VOTE

More Than 100,000, According to Analysis by Democratic National Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—In the late election the Democrats gained two seats in the House of Representatives. The gains were made in North Dakota and Pennsylvania. John M. Baer, a former Democratic Postmaster, elected as a nonpartisan from Dakota, is claimed by the majority as being a Democrat. He has nearly always voted with that party. In Pennsylvania W. H. Beshlin, Democrat, was elected to succeed a Republican, who retired after entering a plea of nolo contendere to an indictment for violation of the Federal election laws.

Discussing the political complexion of the country, based upon the recent elections, a statement issued by the Democratic National Committee today says:

"The reversal in the Pennsylvania district was the most significant of any of the results in the Congressional elections on Nov. 6. In this district of the Keystone State a year ago a Republican was elected to Congress by a majority of 4,000. In the recent election Beshlin, the Democrat, won by more than 2,000, a change in twelve months of 6,000 votes.

"There have been seven Congressional elections since the general election of November, 1916, when President Wilson was re-elected. Six of these elections were held in districts that have usually elected Republicans. The seventh occurred in the Fifteenth District of New York City, where a Democrat was returned.

"The six Republican districts were the First New Hampshire, Sixth Indiana, First North Dakota, Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania, Fourth Connecticut, and Sixth Massachusetts.

"In the First New Hampshire District, formerly represented by the late Republican 'warhorse,' Cy Sulloway, the Democrats reduced the normal Republican majority by nearly 1,000 votes.

"In the Sixth Indiana, Republicans elected one of their number, Representative Richard W. Elliott, to succeed Representative Comstock, Republican, deceased.

"The strongly Republican districts in Connecticut and Massachusetts voted true to form, and elected Republicans to the vacancies. Democrats likewise maintained their supremacy in the Fifteenth, New York District, where Tom Smith, Secretary of Tammany Hall, was elected to succeed the late Representative Conry.

"In none of the districts where the special elections were held was there any indication of a falling off in the Democratic strength. The First North Dakota and the Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania Districts disclosed disaffection in the Republican ranks.

"The reversals in the North Dakota and Pennsylvania districts are all the more marked when it is considered that the combined majorities in the six Republican districts where vacancies occurred were 32,874 a year ago.

"Even more significant as an indication of decreasing Republican strength is the result in the recent Mayoralty election in Greater New York. There has been much speculation as to the source from which Morris Hillquit, the Socialist candidate, obtained his increased vote in the New York Mayoralty fight. A comparison of the Mayoralty vote with the Presidential vote of 1916 makes it evident that Hillquit gained many of his supporters from the Republican Party.

"In 1916 the total vote of the five counties in Greater New York for President was 697,431, of which Wilson received 351,312, Hughes 311,974, and Benson, Socialist, 31,787. The total vote for Mayor in 1917, according to published tables, was 642,445, or a trifle over 92 per cent. of the total vote in 1916. Hylan received 297,282. If he had received 92 per cent. of the Wilson vote he would have had 323,611. Mitchel received 149,307, Hillquit 142,178, and Bennett 53,678. Hillquit's vote represented an increase of 110,391 over the Socialist vote for President in 1916. Even though it be assumed that Hillquit received 10,000 of the unaccounted for portion of the Democratic vote not cast for Hylan, it is evident that over 100,000 of the Hillquit vote must have been cast for Hughes a year ago—31 per cent. of the Hughes vote in Greater New York.

"Viewing the New York vote from another angle, it is apparent that the Hughes vote disintegrated into the Mitchel, Bennett and Hillquit camps. Even if the total vote for Mitchel and Bennett be combined, ignoring the undoubted fact that Mitchel must have received many Democratic votes, the united strength of these two candidates amounts to only about 203,000, or 108,000 less than the Hughes vote. The greater portion of the Hillquit vote came from former Republicans. There can be no question as to this, by whatever process the vote may be analyzed."

SUGGESTS A FARM FOR EVERY SOLDIER

Senator Harding Wants Them to Have Land When They Return from the War.

VAST TRACTS AVAILABLE

Ohian Says It Is the Duty of the Government to Prepare the Way for the Men to Get Homes.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—That every United States soldier, when he returns from the war, should have an opportunity to become the owner of a farm is a principle enunciated here today by Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio. That providing land for these men who have served the nation be only a part of a well-laid plan for converting the greatest possible number of citizens into productive farm owners is further urged. Senator Harding believes that the Government can no longer avoid action on the vital and fundamental problem of proper land distribution, and that action will be forced by the frame of mind that will grow out of the war.

"Every thoughtful man realizes," said Senator Harding, "that the proper distribution of the land is the very basis of national well being. The land should, as far as possible, be in the possession and ownership of the men who work it. A nation of owners of small farms which support sturdy families is the ideal. The magnificence of France when the supreme test came has been largely due to the sturdy folk of her farms. These were the people who paid the price of the loss of the Franco-Prussian war. They have been the saviors of France in many emergencies. But for the solution of the land question and its division into small tracts in the ownership of the people France would probably have ceased to exist before this.

"In the United States the drift of the people to the cities, the drift of farms into operation by tenant farmers, into ownership in large acreage by absent landlords, has been recognized as a dangerous tendency of the times. The stress has not been such in the past that action has been forced. But out of the war will grow many new demands from the people. The man on the street will appreciate his rights more clearly and will be more ready to demand them. Among his most probable demands will be his right to the land. The quicker and stronger he makes that demand, the better for the nation.

"Wise is the nation which sees the coming of such a demand and meets it before it becomes a menace. Wiser is the nation which inaugurates those reforms that are in the interest of its well being even before they are demanded.

500,000,000 Acres Available.

"The situation in the United States today is about this: Vast quantities of good farming land near the best markets in the world are not cultivated. In New England there are 30,000,000 acres of unused land that might be growing crops. New England is discovering that one great industrial plant after another is moving West, establishing itself in Ohio or Missouri or Illinois. New England has been asking why, and has found that manufacturers believe they can produce more cheaply if they are nearer the regions where food and raw materials are produced. New England, to hold her factories, must get people on her farms.

"There are 35,000,000 acres in the Middle States that might be farmed, but which are lying idle. Much of this land is in the very outskirts of cities where food prices are high and the demand unlimited. In the Pacific Coast States there are 180,000,000 acres of unused but usable land. In all 500,000,000 acres or thereabouts is lying idle, to say nothing of that which is inadequately farmed.

"In the meantime the cities are full of people whose greatest ambition is to own a piece of this waste land and to convert it into productive homes. The mass of the foreigners in this country came from agricultural communities in Europe and would like to be on farms over here. They are allowed to become submerged in foreign sections of great cities, to be swallowed up in less wholesome activities and to be lost to this sort of beneficial productiveness.

Need Farm Training.

"There is no proper agency to bring these men and the land together. There is only the land agent, whose name has often become one of reproach. His sole object is to sell land for as much money as possible. His responsibility ends there. There is no agency that goes further, that establishes the man on the land, that makes him a success. Nobody takes any care to see that he buys land that will yield crops.

"Even if the man in the city gets good land and at a fair price, it is practically impossible for him to establish himself and make a success without guidance and co-operation. The machine is not built up that will convert him from a city-dwelling wage earner to an independent farmer. That is exactly the machinery that should be developed. The proper agency to supervise its development is the Government. The time is now.

"When the 2,000,000 men to be trained for the army come home there will be an unparalleled opportunity. These young men will be unattached. They will have been weaned away from their former tasks and associates. They will be wanting to strike a field for themselves. They should have the opportunity. The nation should prepare the way. Canvasses might be taken months ahead of the disbandment of the armies and preparations made in accordance with the returns. The lumber of cantonments might be utilized in making soldier homes upon the land."

anxiety as to further advances in the cost of materials; the rising cost of labor is now the uncertain factor. Some railroad executives are of the opinion that, for the period of the war, Government regulation of wages as well as the cost of materials would help to stabilize the transportation industry. In England, where railroad earnings are guaranteed by the Government for the period of the war, the Government has granted a special war bonus of 15 shillings a week to all railroad employes and the employes' organizations have agreed to make no further demands of higher rates of pay. The English Government also has increased passenger rates 50 per cent.

It is understood that there has been some consideration to an increase in passenger fares on all Eastern railroads.

When Mr. Willard was before the commission he said that he would maintain his property, even though it forced him to reduce dividends. Even though the Eastern railroads stopped paying all dividends, the amount so saved would be only $128,000,000—a sum not very much in excess of the increases in wages that have been granted this year. Paul Warburg of the Federal Reserve Board, in his testimony on the credit situation before the commission on Friday, said that the passing of dividends would be a financial calamity. He pointed out that a number of roads, like the Erie, the New Haven, and Boston & Maine were not paying any dividends, and that, therefore, the roads most in need of relief would gain nothing by such a policy. He also said that the passing of dividends by such great systems as the Pennsylvania, the New York Central, and the Baltimore & Ohio would virtually destroy their credit and make their bonds illegal for savings bank investment.

WARN IRISH LEADERS AGAINST GERMAN PERIL

Lowell Branch of United Irish League Says Berlin Seeks to Make Catspaw of Erin.

LOWELL, Mass., Nov. 18.—German intrigue in Ireland was denounced in a manifesto adopted here tonight by the Lowell branch of the United Irish League and mailed to party leaders in Ireland.

"As loyal American citizens we are most deeply interested in the cause for which the United States has entered the war, and we are utterly and irrevocably opposed to any policy that might injure the United States or her Allies by giving aid and comfort to the enemy and thereby prolonging the war," says the manifesto.

After declaring the party's support of the Constitutional movement, the manifesto continues:

"As for any promises of independence for Ireland coming from Germany, with all our souls we denounce them as hypocritical and insincere, but equally to be spurned if they were sincere. Never in her history has Ireland been arrayed against human freedom, and she would be unworthy of freedom if she joined with the modern Attila. Germany is trying to make a catspaw of Ireland, and unfortunately some Irishmen are helping her horde of paid agents in that direction.

"The wrongs which England inflicted upon Ireland in past ages, and even the recent betrayal of Ireland and her leaders by Premier Asquith, followed by the brutal execution of the Sinn Fein leaders, can never be excused or forgotten, yet we would a thousand times rather have Ireland remain under England than to pass under the sway of Germany to suffer later on such barbarous infamies as were practiced upon Poland and Belgium."

PERSHING VISITS GRAVES.

Interested In French Gratitude to the American Dead.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Saturday, Nov. 17, (by The Associated Press.)—General Pershing on a trip to the front visited the newly-made graves in which lie the bodies of the three victims of the recent trench raid. They are on a green hill, overlooking a small village.

General Pershing showed especial interest in the simple markers upon the graves, recording the name, company, and regiment of each of the Americans buried there, and in the wreath of native flowers hung within the inclosure, upon which had been placed, in French, the following inscription:

"Here lie the first soldiers of the great Republic of the United States, who died on the soil of France for justice and liberty, Nov. 3, 1917."

PROMISES STREETS NOW WILL IMPROVE

Public Service Official Declares That Conditions Have Passed Their Worst Point.

NO HOPE OF WINTER RELIEF

Two Months Set as Time for the Removal of Most of the Subway Obstructions.

If one wants a sympathetic audience let him go to any person whose business or home is in Seventh Avenue below Forty-second Street, or in Broadway above Thirty-fourth Street, or in any of a number of other districts in the city, and tell the story of the visiting Englishman who, after having been personally conducted by an American friend on a tour of New York, when asked his opinion of the place, replied: "New York will be a fine city when they get it finished."

Many persons who admit that they may some day be proud of the city's new subway system are now viewing with impatience the total or partial impassability of many of the streets and avenues where for weeks and months, in some cases years, contractors have been working upon subway construction. The citizens want the subways, but most of them apparently do not believe that their thoroughfare interests have been as carefully protected as they might have been and they are wondering when the streets will be free from obstructions.

A TIMES reporter went out last week to gather what facts he could relative to the condition of the streets, and, although he found the situation bad, he received this positive promise of improvement from James B. Walker, Secretary of the Public Service Commission:

"Street conditions are at their worst. From now on they will get better."

Mr. Walker predicted that within two months most of the thoroughfares would be open, and that many obstructions at present complained of would be removed much sooner. Mr. Walker said that the Seventh and Lexington Avenue subway lines would be open for operation between Jan. 1 and 15, and that the Broadway line would be running up to Thirty-fourth Street by Jan. 15 and up to Forty-second Street not long thereafter. The opening of the lines, he added, meant the opening of the streets above them also.

Although somewhat encouraged by Mr. Walker's statement, many persons to whom it was repeated realized that it really promised them another Winter with the difficulties of excavations and obstructions added to those of snow and ice—and they had hoped, until recently, that the coming of the elemental interference with traffic would find most of the structural interference removed.

Charge War with Responsibility.

The effort to learn who or what should be blamed for the present condition of the streets resulted in a general fixing of responsibility upon the war. The war, it was said by representatives of the Public Service Commission and the contractors, had produced a shortage of materials and of labor that had prevented the completion of subway construction upon schedule time, and the regulation of the work in the best interests of the public.

Seventh Avenue was mentioned as an example. After having been torn up for months while excavation for the subway was in process, this thoroughfare was found still to be obstructed seriously by piles of sand, paving stones, and gravel, by many large cable spools, by depressions and openings in the pavement, and by paraphernalia of all kinds left standing at the curb. When the contractors were asked why some of these obstructions could not be removed they replied that they would all be needed soon and that there was no other place than the street where they could be kept without ruinous expense. A representative of the Public Service Commission supported the contractors, saying that everything possible had been done to prevent the unnecessary delivery of material to the avenue and to hasten the removal of obstructions.

At the offices of the Public Service Commission it was said that there were 1,500 men employed in the engineering department of the commission who were alert to prevent needless street obstruction and to investigate complaints of property holders, with power to correct abuses by the contractors. It was maintained by both the commission and the contractors that these men were always "on the job" in the interest of the public.

In an effort to determine whether there was proper supervision of the unloading of sand, gravel, steel girders, and other materials, the reporter sought information concerning the practice followed by the contractors and learned that each gang foreman for whom a load of anything was delivered usually directed the placing of the load as near as possible to the point where he wanted to use it. When asked whether the average gang foreman might not be more interested in placing the load where it would suit him than in the convenience of the public, one contractor interviewed replied that the public was protected to a considerable extent by the regulation which prohibited interference with access to theatres, manholes, fire hydrants, and buildings at which vehicles frequently stopped. This regulation was observed, said the contractor, because violations usually resulted in complaints by property holders to the Public Service Commission, immediate orders from the commission for the removal of obstructions, and the disciplining of the negligent foremen by their employers, who were forced to unnecessary expense because of the removals. In addition, it was said that the activities of engineers from the Public Service Commission and the contractors' offices constituted adequate supervision. Some critics, however, believe they see in the system for unloading materials on the street, by which a great deal of responsibility is left with gang foremen, one of the causes of needless obstruction.

Acquits Subway Contractors.

Mr. Walker of the Public Service Commission would not charge any contractor in the city with undue negligence of the public's interest in closing streets with structural work or in obstructing them with materials and apparatus employed in work. He said that, making allowances for human shortcomings, he could give all of the contractors credit for co-operating with the commission in attempting to cause the public as little inconvenience as possible. The contractors, on their part, had only words of commendation for the commission, saying that the commission's engineers were always active on behalf of the public.

Some of the complaints of street conditions heard by the reporter came from persons who called attention to the fact that, while some streets were torn up or obstructed by subway work, other adjacent and parallel thoroughfares were torn up for repaving, with the result that congestion was increased. The most noticeable instance of this condition was pointed out as that of Broadway and Sixth Avenue for several blocks above Thirty-fourth Street, the former being affected by subway work and the latter by paving.

When an explanation was sought from the Bureau of Highways of the Borough President's office, which has charge of paving matters, it was said that one of the first rules of the department was that no street paralleling one not completely open to traffic should be closed for paving work except in cases of practical necessity. Sixth Avenue, it was said, had been subjected to the wear and tear of extraordinary traffic during the years of subway work on Seventh Avenue and the months of work on Broadway, until its pavement, which had not been replaced for sixteen years, had given way completely under the strain.

Conditions on Sixth Avenue had become so bad, it was insisted, that the thoroughfare was almost impassable and might as well be closed for a time while it was being repaved. If the work on Seventh Avenue had not been delayed so long beyond the time estimated for its completion, it was pointed out, Sixth Avenue would have been able to stand the traffic of both avenues until Seventh was restored to vehicles. The work on Sixth Avenue was being rushed and would be completed at the earliest possible moment, it was promised.

JOIN ZIONIST MOVEMENT.

Enlistment of Two Rothschilds Reported in London Dispatch.

The Jewish Morning Journal published the following yesterday as a special dispatch from London:

"At a reception held in Princess Hall, Piccadilly, London, given by Lord Rothschild, the head of the Rothschild family in England, in celebration of the official declaration by the British Government in favor of a Jewish home land in Palestine, Lord Rothschild announced that his younger brother, Charles, and Baron Edmund De Rothschild of Paris, head of the French branch of the Rothschild family, had joined the Zionist movement.

"The reception was attended by all the Zionist leaders in England as well as by prominent Jews and gentiles. One of the latter, a priest, presented Lord Rothschild with a handsome volume of suitable texts relating to the return of the Jews to Palestine.

"The prevailing opinion in well-informed Zionist circles in London is that Russia will urge the interallied conference, to be held soon in Paris, to give its approval to Zionism. The Armenian Consul in London congratulated the Zionist leaders on their excellent prospect of getting Palestine, and expressed a hope that the Jews would prove good neighbors.

"Lord Swaythling, Lucien Wolf, the publicist, who is the foreign editor of the London Daily Graphic, and Sir Philip Magnus, a Member of Parliament, formed a league of British Jews to combat the view that the Jews form a nation, as manifest by the Palestine declaration of the British Government. This league, however, expresses the readiness to facilitate the settlement of the Jews in Palestine.

"The German newspaper, Germania, organ of the German Catholic Party, urges the German Government to take steps against the alliance of Great Britain and the Zionists."

Despondent Widow Found Dead.

Mrs. Anna Maude Cummings, 48 years old, was found dead with a bullet wound in her temple yesterday afternoon in her apartment at 772 St. Nicholas Avenue, after the report of a revolver shot had brought others in the building to her room. On a table was a note saying that she could no longer bear her troubles. Mrs. Cummings had brooded over the fact that her husband, a retired lawyer, had suffered a paralytic stroke and was in a sanitarium in a helpless condition.

DIET KITCHEN TO BE OPENED

Instructions Will Be Given In Solving Food Problems.

A new war conservation kitchen is to be opened at 305 West Thirteenth Street by Mrs. John Wood Stewart. The kitchen will be in charge of a professional dietitian and will be open to all who have food problems to solve. Mrs. Stewart, who is founder and President of the National Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild, will be at the kitchen much of the time to oversee the work. She has purchased two houses on Thirteenth Street and is having the upper floors of one of the houses remodeled into an apartment for herself and family.

The yards surrounding the houses will be turned into ideal garden plots.

The Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild will carry on its conservation work in the basement of one of the buildings. The dietitian will make her home here and there will be rooms where lectures will be given and others will be used for practical demonstrations. Jellies are now being made for the soldiers. In one of the dismantled houses, yesterday, hundreds of bushels of apples were being sorted for jelly, apple butter and other conserves. The Guild has already sent 2,000 jars of jelly to the soldiers in France and is to send more to the soldiers in camp hospitals at home.

TRIAL BEGINS TODAY OF MRS. DE SAULLES

Young Woman Who Killed Divorced Husband at His Home on Aug. 3 Will Plead Insanity.

GREAT INTEREST IN CASE

Justice Manning Refuses to Reserve Seats and Warns Against Knitting and Cameras.

The trial of Mrs. Blanca de Saulles for the murder of her divorced husband, John Longer de Saulles, former Yale football star and politician, will begin this morning at 10 o'clock in the courtroom of Supreme Court Justice Manning at Mineola, L. I.

One hundred and fifty men have been called from among whom to select a jury. Because of the wide publicity given to the case, great care will be exercised in the selection of the jury, especially on the part of District Attorney Charles R. Weeks. If the jury is completed today, however, it is expected that the trial will not last beyond the present week, because the issues are comparatively simple. There is no dispute regarding the fact that Mrs. de Saulles shot her husband to death and little conflict as to the manner in which she did it.

The prisoner can well set up a defense of insanity. The foundation has been laid for a partial assertion of self-defense in the statement of the maid of Mrs. de Saulles, who saw the killing, that the husband looked as if he was about to attack her.

But the real defense, as has been admitted by Henry A. Uterhart, counsel for Mrs. de Saulles, will be that she was driven to desperation by the fear that her husband was poisoning the mind of their child against her, and would supplant her in his affections. After hearing for the first time the young woman's recital of how she had been brought from her home in Chile to a land of strangers, neglected for other women, and then threatened with the loss of her child, the lawyer said: "If I fail to acquit this young woman I will give up my license to practice law."

Unacquainted with Our Laws.

One plea which was effectively used in the Josephine Terranova case, though it bears no resemblance in other particulars to this trial, was the argument to the jury that the young woman could not justly be credited with the full responsibility for her act for the reason that she was brought up in another country, with different laws and customs, and had not the friends in this country or the knowledge of American institutions, which would enable her to obtain redress in a lawful manner.

One of the interesting questions, which has not been cleared up, but which will probably become an important issue in the trial, is how it happened that John L. de Saulles, though his guilt was established at the divorce trial, was granted an equal or greater interest and share in the custody of the child than was allowed to the mother, whose innocence was not called in question. It has been asserted on behalf of the relatives of the late John L. de Saulles that the young woman agreed to these unusual terms, but this has been emphatically denied by Mrs. de Saulles herself, who insisted that she was not a willing party to any such stipulation.

While this and other things caused the bitterness of the younger woman toward her divorced husband, the act itself was prompted, it will be alleged, by the fact that Mrs. de Saulles believed that her husband had broken his word and had kept the boy from her during a period when the child should have been in her possession, according to their agreement. It has been asserted by counsel for the young woman that she went to de Saulles' country home, The Box, near the Meadowbrook Club on Aug. 3, with no purpose beyond that of obtaining possession of the boy, and that the alleged rudeness and deception with which she was received caused her on the impulse of the moment to shoot. Various other circumstances have been alleged to prove lack of premeditation.

District Attorney Weeks, who has a record in Nassau County as an unrelenting and effective prosecutor, insists that he can see nothing in the case but deliberate, cold-blooded murder. He will be assisted in the prosecution by Charles L. Wood and Elvin N. Edwards, attached to his office. Mr. Uterhart will be assisted by Judge Lewis J. Smith, who prosecuted Mrs. Carman in the same Court House.

Assurances of Decorum.

Supreme Court Justice Manning, who presides at the trial, is a believer in the strictest decorum in the courtroom, and has taken steps to insure a neutral and judicial courtroom atmosphere. A warning has been issued to the public against the slightest infringement of courtroom etiquette at the trial, with special admonitions against knitting and the use of cameras. Because of the limited seating capacity and the wide public interest, the Clerk of the Court has issued tickets to newspaper men and others with business in the court. The remaining 175 seats will be open to the public, first come, first served. Many applications for reserved seats were made, some by people prominent in society, who had been friendly to De Saulles, but it was ruled that none except those directly interested in the case should receive favor.

The four-and-a-half-year-old boy, for whose possession the mother committed the act for which she is on trial, will probably not be in the courtroom. He is at present with Mrs. Caroline Degner and Mrs. G. Maurice Heckscher, relatives of De Saullea. The family of De Saulles, so far as is known, has not interested itself in the prosecution, although Charles de Saulles, a brother of the dead man, engaged counsel a few days after the killing to protect his brother's name. The District Attorney will not be assisted by counsel engaged by the family.

Mrs. de Saulles will be accompanied in court by her mother, Mme. Errazuriz-Vergara of Santiago, Chile, who came here on the first steamer leaving Chile after the arrest of her daughter.

CHARITY NEEDED AT HOME.

Organization Society, Mr. De Forest Urges, Requires Support Now.

Robert W. de Forest, President of the Charity Organization Society, 105 East Twenty-second Street, in a statement given out yesterday, urged the people of this city not to neglect the needs of social work here in making sacrifices demanded by the war. Whatever economies that could be made without impairing its helpfulness have been effected by the society, Mr. de Forest said, but many families seeking its assistance were beginning to suffer because of the rise in prices.

"Under the care of the society last year were 6,326 families, which were so handicapped as to be unable to take advantage of the general demand for labor," added Mr. de Forest, "and a valuable national service is being performed in working to reorganize these households to make their members available for the ranks of industry. The Charity Organization Society is confident that the people of New York will make sacrifices, if need be, that those in distress at home may not suffer."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Dispatch of a commission of prominent American Jews to Rumania to direct relief work for the Jewish population of that country is planned by the American Union of Rumanian Jews. In making this announcement tonight the union said:

"The plight of the Jews in Rumania at the present time is perhaps worse than that of any other people in the war zone. It not only is a question of money that should be sent to them, but also food and clothing."

ALASKAN STEAMER LOST.

All of the Mariposa's 265 Passengers Reported Saved.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18.—The Alaska Steamship Company's steamer Mariposa, one of the finest vessels on the Alaska route, was wrecked on Straits Island, Summer Sound, Southeastern Alaska, Sunday, according to advices received tonight by the Chamber of Commerce here.

It was said that all of the ship's 265 passengers were landed safely.

Japanese "Invention" Old Here.

Commenting on the Washington dispatch to THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday, to the effect that two Japanese had invented a method by which communication could be freely made between an ordinary telephone wire system and a wireless system, Professor M. I. Pupin of Columbia University and Colonel John J. Carty, chief engineer of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company pointed out that a similar invention had been made by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company several years ago, and that a year ago President Theodore N. Vail of the company talked from New York to Mare's Island by means of an ordinary long-distance telephone which was hooked up to a radio apparatus at Arlington.

Chauffeurs Needed for Army Now.

In connection with recruiting for the Quartermaster Corps an appeal was sent out yesterday for volunteer chauffeurs for immediate service. Men capable of handling and caring for Army trucks are urgently needed. All enlistments are made in the grade of private, recruiting officers said, but men who prove their ability can be assured of promotion. Applications should be made in person at 357 Broadway, between Leonard and Franklin Streets.

The Note of Distinction at the Hampton Shops
THE charm of the unusual at the Hampton Shops brings you under its spell the moment you step across the threshold into the lofty and dignified Entrance Hall.
It is to be accounted for by the fact that even the famous Hampton Reproductions, preserving as they do the very savor of old world Romance, are here regarded as merely incidental to some large and well matured scheme.
It is the intuitive sense of the varying personality of all that goes to make the perfect room, the ability to design harmonious settings, and the subtle skill in arrangement, that have made the Hampton Shops supreme masters of all included in that ofttime mis-used term—Interior Decoration.

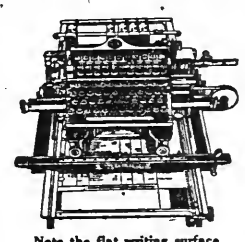
Half Million Dollar Golf Business Without Accounting Troubles
With a thousand dollars worth of stock, an idea and a policy, George H. Lambert of Chicago rented a little upstairs room over on Dearborn Street near the Post Office in the summer of 1910. The stock was golf clubs—the idea an exclusive Golf Specialty Shop—and the policy one of "service to customers."
The little Golf Shop has grown in seven years to a half million dollar business. Business expansion was so rapid the bookkeeping department could not keep pace with sales. Three years ago three women did all the bookkeeping and stenography. Two years later twelve people could not handle the accounts alone—the pen and ink way—for the Golf Shop was adding new customers at the rate of 300 a week. Customers statements were never mailed on time—trial balance difficulties were common instead of extraordinary and the Golf Shop—as Mr. L. F. Marshall, its Treasurer, remarked—"was up against it."
About that time Elliott-Fisher The Bookkeeping Machine was installed.


Note the flat writing surface on which forms are held in the natural flat writing position. This makes the proof sheet possible.
Six months later Mr. Marshall reported, "We have no accounting troubles now. It seems almost miraculous how Elliott-Fisher The Bookkeeping Machine turns out the work for us, makes statements, posts ledger and proves balances. The machine does everything but sell the goods—in fact the chances are the neatness, accuracy and promptness made possible by the Elliott-Fisher Machines have a lot to do with making satisfied customers of our trade, which is extremely exclusive and critical."
The Golf Shop now has one Elliott-Fisher operator doing the work it took three people previously to do.
Again quoting from Mr. Marshall, "Any mercantile firm, in my opinion, which hasn't Elliott-Fisher The Bookkeeping Machine is doing its profits an injustice."
We shall be glad to furnish further information should you wish to put your bookkeeping on a more profitable basis. We have offices in all principal cities. Address —the fortunes of a world are being wrought.

"At the Flaming Forge of Life"—

Never have men of any age seen what we are seeing. Never have changes so violent, so tremendous, so rapid, in the entire structure of national, business, and social life heaved up the very foundations of the world. Never have so many new problems, so many demands for readjustment, thrust themselves upon men and women for settlement.

Things big with fate are happening fast. They are arousing violent prejudices, with clashing opinions in every assembly and in every newspaper where the minds and hearts of men find expression.

The need for exact information is imperative. Clear understanding of what is going on is indispensable. Busy men and women throughout the nation are demanding to know the real facts and the real meanings of them. Confusion, uncertainty, mistake, lack of correct information may mean disaster to their dearest interests.

Why in all this turmoil of events and jangling voices, are two million of the best citizens of America turning, each week, to THE LITERARY DIGEST?

Why are more than 282,000 manufacturers and merchants reading it closely? It is not devoted especially to factory or trade.

Why do more than fifty thousand physicians and more than forty-six thousand lawyers buy THE LITERARY DIGEST? It certainly is not a medical journal, nor is it given over to discussions of law.

Why is it bought regularly by more than eighty thousand officials of the United States Government, State and Municipal officials, officers in public service companies, bankers, contractors, builders, and engineers? It does not specialize in any of their particular affairs.

Why do more than a hundred thousand newspaper editors, publishers, superintendents of schools, educators, libraries, colleges, and professional men subscribe for THE LITERARY DIGEST? It is not planned particularly for them, nor for the many thousands of brokers, real-estate dealers, or other special classes of active men and women who are finding it their most valuable magazine.

One all-controlling reason must be given. We're in a world crisis. America has taken up the greatest burdens that can come to the richest, strongest nation on earth. All of us, business men, professional men, officials, and laboring men, are, first and last, Americans, and these tasks and problems come straight home to us. Our blood and our treasure are called into this supreme struggle of humanity. We must know how to win, and how to adjust our business, our homes, our personal lives to the new conditions. There is no time for round-about, fragmentary, or unreliable information. There is no strength to waste in prejudice or partizanship.

Nowhere, except in THE LITERARY DIGEST, is it possible to find all the vital news of world events clearly and truthfully explained, without editorial bias, together with an impartial record of the leading opinions of men and women, newspapers and magazines from every land in this great, throbbing world of action.

THE LITERARY DIGEST is the one satisfying magazine for all Americans. It knows no party, no creed, no social division. It brings, each week, to all alike, the important things of business, of politics, of industry, education, religion, science, literature, and art, and of the great happenings of the world war.

Lord Northcliffe, Publisher of the London Times, speaks with reason, then, as well as authority, when he says that "THE LITERARY DIGEST is the most indispensable weekly publication in the world."

THE LITERARY DIGEST has searched for you the work-shops and has read for you the thousands of newspapers and magazines of civilization, and it tells you what they all are doing and saying.

THE LITERARY DIGEST has reached into the power houses of the world, and it connects you by its own live wire, each week, with the great forces which are remaking the nations of earth and changing the destinies of humanity.

THE LITERARY DIGEST stands close to the "Flaming Forge of Life," and out of the white heat of a world's mighty labors, and strivings, and discussions, it brings to you, week by week—

QUAKERS ROUNDING INTO SUPERB FORM AS FOOTBALL SEASON DRAWS TO A CLOSE

MICHIGAN ELEVEN LACKS OPEN GAME

Wolverines Had No Varied Attack to Overcome Penn's Stubborn Defense.

FEW TEAMS OF HIGH RATING

Football of 1917 Provides Little of Lustre Found in Seasons of the Past.

As far as general interest goes in an unsettled football season, such as the one now drawing to a close, no game on the Eastern gridiron came in for more attention than the Pennsylvania-Michigan contest Saturday True, Penn is not the best team in the East, by any means, nor is Michigan the best in the West, but Pennsylvania is an excellent example of the development of an eleven under adverse conditions From a 41 to 0 defeat early in the season by Georgia Tech, Penn has kept everlastingly at it until Coach Bob Folwell has turned out a team which has done remarkably well under conditions which call for military drill, no training table, no early season practice, shorter practice hours, and limited coaching

Michigan, of course, had to work under much the same handicap. The Maize and Blue captain, Smith, is in the service of Uncle Sam, and no player was elected to succeed him, as was the case at Brown when the captain-elect, Mark Farnum, joined the colors. Both Smith and Farnum will live in the college records as the leaders of the 1917 elevens at Michigan and Brown. Fielding Yost met with great success with the green eleven which he built up, but like other Western elevens in the past, the Michigan team was over-rated. It was not as good a team as advance reports made it.

Michigan went onto Franklin Field a decided favorite over Penn, but when the elevens clashed it was easily seen that the Wolverines were not as good as the Quakers. The loss of Weston was a heavy one to Michigan, but it was no harder blow than the loss of Straus to Penn. The fight on the field between these two players was the most flagrant outburst of its kind that has been seen in an important game in a long time. Umpire Dave Fultz's prompt measure of discipline in disqualifying the players put a quick stop to the slugging.

The two first downs which Michigan made in the game came in the first period, when Weston was the leading spirit of the rushing. However, four successive first downs by Penn came in that same period, with Straus leading the attack.

Michigan Lacked Versatility.

Michigan has nothing in the way of open game tactics. It relied on old line-smashing plays to gain, which did not work out against a fighting line such as Penn had. The Wolverines' attack was always apparent, never tricky or never cleverly executed. They could not use the forward pass at all. The shift plays and fake formations of Penn were simple enough tactics but Michigan failed to diagnose them.

There was some good football and much bad football in the Michigan-Penn clash. In fact, it has been much that way in all the games this season. None of the elevens have the finish of the best teams of past seasons. They lack that polish which comes from constant expert coaching. Under the war conditions, the best teams are probably better than was expected but they are far from being high-class gridiron machines.

It was the spirit and the aggressiveness of Penn rather than superior football knowledge which carried it to victory. It happened to be one of the temperamental Howard Berry's good days. The conditions under which he kicked two of his three field goals were very favorable and the other kick was a beauty from a difficult angle. But Penn's scoring processes this season have been neither consistent nor reliable. The chief asset of the eleven is its fine defense. The work of Wray at centre, of Maynard and Thomas, the tackles, of Miller and Van Ginkel, the ends, and of Light the half back, in stopping the Michigan backs with deadly tackling, was defensive football of high order.

Dartmouth's downfall in the game with Tufts was a great surprise, because, after the stiff fight that the Hanover boys gave Penn, it looked as if the Green would have no trouble with Tufts, which a few weeks ago was beaten 58 to 0 by Syracuse. One explanation of the Green's tumble is that the team was all used up after the Penn ordeal and had nothing in reserve. Early in the season the Brown-Dartmouth struggle, which is to be played next Saturday, gave promise of being one of the best contests of the season, but much of the lustre has been stripped from the game because both teams have suffered decisive defeats.

Colgate Loses Prestige.

Colgate is another team which has gone stale after a good beginning. Syracuse gave the Hamilton eleven a bad drubbing, and Colgate's crack backfield, which was ranked as one of the best last season, has been effectively subdued this year.

Annapolis ended the season by running up their largest score of the year against Villanova. The Navy eleven, under Dobie's coaching, has developed into an unusually fast and powerful team. An effort is being made by the Navy officials to arrange a game for Saturday. The Army, with Oliphant doing most of the work, easily defeated Lebanon Valley, and it has one more game to play with Brickley's Boston College team.

Cornell's chances against Penn on Thanksgiving Day have faded into oblivion, for there seems to be little hope of a revival at Ithaca after being defeated by Fordham so badly Saturday. Fordham had its open game working beautifully, and the forward passes were more than Cornell bargained for. Cornell has had one of the worst seasons in football history, having been defeated four times.

Williams finished the season, for the first time, without a defeat. The great work of Boynton, the Williams quarterback, figured conspicuously in the defeat of Amherst. Williams has gone through the season without a defeat, one no score tie game being played with Wesleyan.

The two best elevens of the year, Georgia Tech and Pittsburgh, disposed of easy opponents. Georgia Tech ran up the high score of 98 to 0 against Carlisle, which is the worst beating the Indians have suffered this season. Pitt toppled over Carnegie Tech by 27 to 0. There is no question about Pitt having the greatest of the eastern elevens, but it would seem that the question of superiority between the Panthers and Georgia must remain unsolved.

Yale Freshmen in Van.

The question of gridiron supremacy among Harvard, Yale, and Princeton this season appears again to rest with Yale. The freshman elevens are furnishing the only competition between these institutions this year, and on Saturday the Yale cubs went to Cambridge and gave Harvard's promising team a severe spanking by 14 to 0. After Harvard's decisive defeat of the Princeton freshmen a week ago by 24 to 0 it was believed that the Crimson would give Yale much trouble, but after Yale's showing it looks as if the Princeton-Yale freshmen clash at New Haven Saturday would place Yale at the top of the "Big Three."

The Exeter-Andover game was one of the closest of the day. In the annual battle between these traditional rivals Exeter won 3 to 0. Harvard's informal eleven met a Tartar in Cupid Black's all stars in Newport, being defeated 14 to 0. The Yale informal eleven played its only game of the season at the Bowl with Trinity and had a hard job winning by a single touchdown. The Princeton informals had an easy time with Naval Reserves from Cape May, rolling up 41 points.

Sol Metzger's Washington and Jefferson eleven, another team which gave much promise during the season, was beaten by West Virginia, but, as in the case with Dartmouth, Washington and Jefferson expended all it had against Pitt a week ago and probably had not fully recovered from the shock. Among the soldier elevens Camp Dix, captained by Huntington, the former Colgate All-America quarterback, easily defeated Percy Haughton's Camp Devens team.

New York will have a chance to see the soldier elevens in action Saturday, when Camp Upton will play Camp Devens at the Polo Grounds, and Cupid Black's stars will play Rutgers at Ebbets Field.

SEASON ENDS AT HARVARD.

Players on Informal Eleven Will Join Naval Reserve Team.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Nov. 18.—Harvard's football season closed with Saturday's game, in which the 'Varsity was beaten at Newport and the Freshmen were taken into camp by the Yale Freshmen. However, several of the 'Varsity players will continue in the game. Among them are Captain Arnold Horween, the fullback, and Tom Woods, the right tackle Both are in the Naval Reserve, returning to college this Fall, as they are under draft age

Both players are expected to join Leo Leary's Charlestown Navy Yard team, which is now drilling for its big game, which will be played against "Cupid" Black's All-Stars in December. Wingate Rollins, the Harvard 'Varsity coach, who has been playing more or less football, is in the Naval Aviation Corps, and he also will be pressed into service for the Charlestown Navy team.

OHIO STATE TAKES TITLE.

Three Western Elevens in Race for Secondary Honors.

CHICAGO, Nov. 18.—With Ohio State in possession of the "Big Ten" football championship for the second consecutive season, Chicago, Illinois, and Minnesota, each with a defeat chalked up against it will fight it out next Saturday for secondary honors of the Western conference race.

The powerful Ohio eleven, with "Chick" Harley, All-American halfback, again its star, came through the championship schedule in accordance with early season predictions.

Minnesota displayed a surprising reversal of form in downing Chicago, 33 to 0. The defeat of the Maroons—the first of the year—was one of the upsets of the year.

TO RAISE AMBULANCE FUND.

Billiard Players Start Campaign to Collect $300,000.

The campaign among the billiard players of the United States to raise a $300,000 ambulance fund for the American Army has already begun operations in many parts of the country. Illinois has pledged $75,000 and Connecticut has set a mark of $25,000, which even now is well within the realm of possibility.

The billiard players of New York will meet for organization this evening at 8:30 o'clock at Thum's Billiard Academy, Thirty-first Street and Broadway.

The first ambulance was purchased yesterday and will soon be on exhibition here in New York.

ADMIRAL USHER SEES GAME.

Fort Slocum Eleven Defeats Pelham Naval Reserves, 13 to 0.

While prominent naval officials looked on, the Fort Slocum football eleven yesterday defeated the Naval Reserves of Pelham Bay at Travers Island by a score of 13 to 0. The game was well attended by representatives of both branches of the service, with the teams having their bands on hand to enliven the occasion, while the army eleven had its mule for a mascot and the navy team its goat. About 4,500 spectators witnessed the game, the majority being enlisted men.

Both teams had former college players. In the first half there was no score by either team. The army backfield showed up strongly in the last two quarters, mainly through the work of Pete Maxfield, the former Lafayette student, whose gridiron work at Mercersburg Academy is still remembered. Maxfield carried the ball over for the first army touchdown in the third quarter after a series of line plunges, and also kicked a goal. In the final quarter another Fort Slocum touchdown was made when, with a few minutes to go, the army men broke through on an attempted punt by O'Boyle from behind the navy goal line and Smith carried the ball over from the 3-yard mark.

At the game were Admiral Usher, Captain D. E. Speyer, Commander Franklin, and Commander Boyle of Pelham Bay. Walter Camp also saw the teams in action.

BRIDGEPORT ELEVEN WINS.

Connecticut Soccer Team Eliminates Clan MacDuffs by 2 Goals to 1.

The Bridgeport City soccer team defeated Clan MacDuff by 2 goals to 1 yesterday at Lenox Oval in the replay from the first round of the cup competition of the American Football Association. While the New Yorkers were eliminated, Bridgeport City advances into the second round to meet the Cromptons of Rhode Island. Both of the goals were scored for the visitors by Sanderson, their outside left.

Another battle royal marked the third meeting between the Scottish-Americans of Newark and the Babcock & Wilcox soccer eleven of Bayonne in the National Challenge Trophy competition at the West Side Baseball Park in Jersey City. Twice the two rival teams had played to a tie, but this time victory by 2 goals to 1 perched upon the banners of the Scottish-Americans.

Playing much the faster football, the West Hudsons of Newark defeated the soccer eleven of the Disston A. A. of Philadelphia by 3 goals to 0 in the annual championship series of the National Football League.

The New York League championship game between the Overseas Wanderers and Greenpoint at Flood's Oval resulted in victory for the Wanderers by 2 goals to 1. In the second period Irvine of the Wanderers scored the deciding goal.

Maintaining their unbeaten record, the La Sultana soccer eleven defeated the Fifth Avenue Coach team by 5 goals to 1 in the Metropolitan League championship match at the Oval in Astoria. Walmsley scored twice and Scott once in the first half, at the end of which the La Sultanas led by 3 to 0.

The Tryconnell Celts defeated the soccer eleven of the Prospect Football Club by 3 goals to 1 at Taft's Oval in Brooklyn yesterday The goals were scored by J. O'Halloran, Ferry and MacFadden.

White Rose defeated the West New York Blues by 5 to 2 in a Metropolitan League game at West New York. The State League game at Woodside, L. I., was forfeited by the Fulton A. C. to the Clan MacDonalds.

Another victory for the soccer eleven representing the Interborough Rapid Transit Company resulted from the New York State League match at Clan Park, Yonkers, where the Yonkers Caledonians were defeated by 3 goals to 1.

MEMBERSHIP PLAN REFUGE OF BOXING

Death of Frawley Law Finds Managers Ready to Return to Former System.

GOVERNOR'S WORDS BASIS

Whitman's Statement in Buffalo Encourages Test of Holding Bouts Under Club Auspices.

New York State has had its first "membership" boxing show, and without any unusual attendant features or adverse attention from the police officials, who henceforth will watch closely every boxing bout staged. The new conditions were initiated Saturday night at the Broadway Sporting Club of Brooklyn, where a card featuring three ten-round exhibitions of "scientific boxing"—according to Announcer John T. Dunn—were given. This show, ushering in the new order of things pugilistic, was run off with success. Two of the bouts went their ten-round limit and the other was stopped in two rounds when it was evident one of the principals was hopelessly outclassed. And the police officials assigned to duty at the club looked on interestedly.

This will give heart to the managers of the various other clubs in the metropolitan district, and it is possible that within a short time clubs will be running shows regularly under the circumstances which prevailed before the Frawley law came into existence. The words credited to Governor Whitman a week ago, to the effect that boxing is not illegal when conducted properly, have led to a scurrying about in the cobwebby corners of the managers' desks and the dusty old shelves that have been forgotten during the last six years for the old, now timeworn membership books. The successful attempt on Saturday, together with Governor Whitman's view on the sport, has supplied confidence among the local club managers, and it is expected that they will now continue holding boxing shows under restricted conditions.

It is a question, however, whether the pastime will be furnished on a large scale in local circles, despite the expectation of those most keenly anxious to keep the sport alive. The sport, with its exponents, promoters, supervisers, and hangers-on, killed itself, is the general opinion, and, since its best chance for life was under the Frawley law, it is universally expected that the same reasons, combining principally greed and disregard of the law, will result in sending the sport below its present level.

The ring game in local circles has suffered many a knock in the past, but there has never been any one at fault except those most directly concerned with its promotion. Figuratively the promoters and others responsible for the death of the Frawley law drew the noose about their own necks, and it now rests absolutely with them whether the sport will be abolished entirely. Certainly it can be expected that there will be no civic or State toleration of illegal or unethical methods in the conduct of the sport under the membership plan which will in future hold sway, at least until the next Legislature convenes, when it is expected that another law for the government and betterment of the game will be drawn up.

Sport Popular in State.

That boxing is popular with residents of this State is manifest in the records kept in the archives of the late New York State Athletic Commission, more generally known as the Boxing Commission. William F. Mathewson, Secretary of the now defunct commission, has shown by his records that over $5,000,000 was paid by the inhabitants of this State for the privilege of watching two trained athletes perform in the roped arena during the six years' reign of the Frawley law.

This amount gives a good idea of the number of people interested in the sport. It includes the receipts of shows held through the present year up to last Wednesday night. Out of this sum a total of over $300,000 was remitted to the State, through taxation, the State levying a tax on all boxing shows held under the law. Naturally, when the law fails to govern the sport this tax will be a thing of the past.

The high-water mark in boxing finances was reached in 1916, when $1,066,468.25 was paid for the exhibitions held, and of this sum the State's revenue was $79,985.11. In 1912, the second year of the Frawley law, bouts attracted aggregate purses of $983,826.20, of which the State's share was $49,195.41. The following table will give the records of the gross receipts and State's share of boxing shows from 1911 up to the final bout under the law:

	Gross Receipts.	State's Revenue.
1911	$235,373.75	$11,768.68
1912	983,826.20	49,195.31
1913	775,596.96	38,781.05
1914	636,913.55	31,846.30
1915	804,101.81	50,687.10
1916	1,066,468.25	79,985.11
1917	873,610.00	65,520.80
Totals	$5,375,890.81	$327,784.30

The law came into effect under worthy conditions but, unfortunately, went out of existence with decidedly bad repute. The final Frawley law bout of importance was the one in which Mike O'Dowd of St. Paul took the middleweight title away from Al McCoy of Brooklyn by scoring a knockout in six rounds. This contest aroused a hue and cry which was anything but favorable to a further continuance of boxing in this State, but out of all the commotion nothing tangible has been produced.

Three Titles Changed Hands.

To all but a scant few who were in at the death of boxing on that memorable night it was apparent that McCoy was hopelessly outclassed and lost his title to a better man, yet there were cries of "fake" which gave boxing unfavorable impetus on its dubious membership way. This, incidentally, was the third historic feature of the Frawley law, in so far as the changing of titles under the law is concerned. The other performances were McCoy's knockout of George Chip, then middleweight champion, and Benny Leonard's feat in taking from Freddie Welsh his lightweight championship.

Otherwise the sport has been uneventful since 1911, although any number of good bouts, with prominent boxers as participants, have been staged. Jess Willard, heavyweight champion, displayed his ability before the biggest crowd of enthusiasts that was ever in attendance at a local boxing bout and for the biggest purse that was ever given a boxer in a New York ring. But that is all Jess did.

In twenty-three States of the Union boxing is allowed under State supervision. The contests permitted range from the four-round, no decision variety, found in California, to the forty rounds with decision exhibitions permitted in Maryland. Connecticut permits bouts of twenty rounds duration to a decision; Massachusetts has twelve-round decision bouts, and Rhode Island has fifteen to twenty round decision contests, so that it is expected that the leading local boxers will hereafter bend their efforts to these out-of-town clubs. A number have already departed for California, where the four-round matches rule.

A number of local club managers have already received applications for membership, in order that those filing the applications may be enabled to see the bouts which the managers intend putting on in the future. Several thousands of these applications have been received, the Broadway and Clermont Sporting Clubs of Brooklyn being among the first to announce intention of continuing. They head the list with more than 2,500 each, and the respective managers of both clubs are hopeful that the authorities will permit their shows unmolested.

One of the biggest assets which the boxing fraternity is now pointing to with pride is the attitude of the National Government with respect to boxing, since the entry of this country in the war. At all the camps and cantonments throughout the country boxing is a part of the curriculum, and many of the leading boxers have been appointed instructors at these camps for the purpose of teaching the soldiers in the manly art. The rudimentary knowledge of boxing has also been found to be beneficial in bayonet charges, and it is on this point chiefly that the promotos' hope for unmolested continuance of their sport under restricted conditions is based.

SPIES DEFEATS BIG FIELD.

Takes Open Road Race Over Harlem Streets by Sprint.

Of a field of 200 harriers who started yesterday in the St. Christopher Club's open road race, Harry Spies of the Morningside A. C. proved best. He had a handicap allowance of 3:30 and finished first in 28:39. The run was the first important one of the season for the local clubs. The field raced over the Harlem Athletic League's course of about five miles, starting from the Spartan Field Club in West 137th Street.

After the first mile Spies and H. Brown, Harbrook A. C., who finished second from the four-minute mark, went to the lead and set the pace to the finish. These two frequently alternated the pace, and near the finish line a sprint won for Spies. Brown finished about ten yards ahead of A. Wyberg, Swedish-American A. C., who was third.

Eddie Mayo, the Brooklyn A. A. distance runner, starting from scratch, won the fast-time prize. He finished in sixty-fourth position. His time was 27:01. The team prize went to the Morningside A. C. athletes, who had 63 points. The Paulist A. C. also had 63 points, but the victory of Spies gave the team laurels to the Morningside harriers, who also won the interleague club prize.

The order of finish follows:

TIGER PASSERS IN LEAGUE.

Princeton to Build Basket Ball Team for Title Series.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 18.—The Princeton basket ball team has received permission by the Board of Athletic Control to enter the Intercollegiate League this season. More than forty candidates reported to Coach Fred W. Luehring when he issued the initial call this week, and it is expected that this number will be increased when the football and crew activities cease.

Coach Luehring will have a difficult task in building up a successful team There is not a man in college who has had any experience in league games. Captain Parmelee has joined the Naval Reserve and McGraw, the centre, holds a Captain's commission in the Reserve Corps. Haas, Paulsen, Foster, Eddy and Cuneo were graduated last June. Flinn and Taylor are the only men here who have ever represented Princeton in a contest. Gregory, Sinclaire, Kelsey, Siedler, Stricker and Williamson are men who are considered likely candidates.

Princeton's season will open Dec. 4, when the Tigers will play Manhattan College. The league schedule is now in process of adoption. John C. Taylor of Shady Gap, Penn., has been appointed manager of the team.

Arnold Wins Pastime A. C. Walk.

A. Arnold, the veteran walker of the Pastime A. C., yesterday won the club's handicap walk, over a distance of about five miles, in the Bronx. Arnold had a handicap of 6:45, and crossed the finish line a winner in 40:35. J. Aronson, who started from scratch, won the fast time prize, finishing fifth in 35:07.

NEW AMATEUR RULE FOR GOLF UNLIKELY

Men Named for Offices of U. S. G. A. Against Any Changes Until After War.

OUIMET FIGHT MAY BE LOST

Little Chance for Reinstatement of Popular Boston Player at Next Annual Meeting.

Possibilities of a change in the present amateur definition in the rules of the United States Golf Association appears more obscure than ever, according to local golfers, who have had a chance to scan over the names of the men nominated for office and to be elected at the next meeting of the national body in Philadelphia during January. Although some of the present officials repeatedly have made it known that they would not be averse to a new rule, members of the so-called old guard have been openly against any changes, especially during the war.

When Howard W. Perrin lays aside the gavel and ascends to the golfing ranks once more, as seems certain he will do at the next annual meeting, since Frederick S. Wheeler is nominated to succeed the popular Philadelphian, followers of Francis Ouimet will lose a strong champion. Mr. Perrin has been in favor of a change in the constitution of the national association which would allow the reinstatement of the young Boston golfer, and suggested that at the next meeting the delegates would have a chance to present a new rule before him, but business has forestalled this by calling Mr. Perrin from the golf world, and for the first time in the history of golf giving a President only one term in office.

The old guard again will be in strong command, and it is plain to local followers of the politics of golf that the West is not going to be encouraged in its insurgency. Many Western clubs have instructed their delegates for a fight for a more lenient interpretation of the amateur rule, and also for a rule abolishing the stymie, both of which were passed by the Western Golf Association last Spring. However, these delegates may find it hard sledding when the annual meeting convenes, because most of the men now nominated are known to be against abolishing the stymie, as well as against any amateur rule other than the one in existence now.

Ouimet Still on Outside.

The Woodland Golf Club at this time last year was making a fight, openly and with wide publicity, for the reinstatement of Ouimet to amateur rights. At the meeting last year the Woodland Club was downed and a proposed amendment to the constitution tabled by the superiority of the old guard. This time members of the Woodland Club have remained quiet, but have been working as assiduously to achieve their desire, but again they seem to have been foiled, since the old guard again is in command.

Not long ago Howard F. Whitney, Secretary of the U. S. G. A., declared, in an interview, that it was not the policy of the U. S. G. A. to wander about in its rule-makings, and that most of the Executive Committee members were desirous of leaving the present rules as they are until after the war at least. He acknowledged that there may be other amateur rules better fitted for the service intended, but he thought that under the circumstances golf in America should not be tampered with until it were possible to give deep thought to correcting existing faults.

Other golf leaders are very much against changing any of the present rules now. They are especially lined up against any of the revolutionary ideas which were enacted in the West. While most of the players agree that the stymie is a matter of luck, most of the time, and on a great many occasions unplayable, these same golfers are not in favor of abolishing the rule until it is possible to take the whole constitution and give it a thorough overhauling.

Silas H. Strawn of Chicago, Chairman of the nominating committee, who selected the new official family-to-be of the U. S. G. A., made a stirring speech in favor of Francis Ouimet but against any change in the amateur rule at the last annual meeting of the national body. Mr. Strawn, a former President, paid tribute to the character of the man and the golf of Ouimet but at the same time he made it plain to the assembled delegates that any drastic action at that time would react against the sport, rather than help it. It was this speech of Mr. Strawn's, more than anything else during the meeting, which prevented a vote on a motion offered by the Woodland delegates, which would have brought about a new amateur rule.

In picking the new officials Mr. Strawn may not have been swayed by a judgment to prevent any reopening of the amateur question but it seems, from the personnel of the new family, that the present code is to remain.

F. S. Wheeler Good Player.

Of the men nominated for office, Frederick S. Wheeler of Apawamis ascends to the Presidency after two years as Treasurer of the U. S. G. A. and with a record as a player the equal of any President of the association. In fact, Mr. Wheeler probably could take any of the past Presidents to the links and teach each one of them several fine points of the game.

Dr. Walter S. Harban of the Columbia Country Club was a member of the official family last year, and is nominated to serve another term as Vice President. He is a prominent Washington golfer, whose hobby is defeating some of the well-known Senators who continually keep the greens of Chevy Chase busy.

Sterling E. Edmunds of the St. Louis Country Club has served on the Executive Committee of the U. S. G. A. during the last year, but is nominated this time to succeed M. Lewis Crosby of the Country Club of Brookline as Vice President. Mr. Crosby finds his business demands too great for further golf work. He was prominent in the last Ouimet controversy, since he was forced to handle most of the work, because Ouimet was a member from the Boston district.

Another Executive Committee member who is to become an officer of the association at the next election is Mortimer N. Buckner of Garden City. Mr. Buckner is nominated to succeed Mr. Wheeler as Treasurer during the time Mr. Wheeler is handling the executive reins.

Several hundred dollars additional has been received for the U. S. G. A. ambulance fund since the total was announced at a little more than $72,000. The Rumson Country Club's offering of $510.50 came along just after the first list was printed, and with it was $86 from Wykagyl, $100 from the Lexington Golf Club of Lexington, Mass.; $120 from the Englewood Golf Club, $86 from the Bellport, N. Y., Golf Club, $62.50 from the Crescent Club of Evansville, Ind., and $22 from the Del Paso Club of Sacramento, Cal.

Recently several golfers from the Oakland Golf Club got far enough away from the charred ruins of their clubhouse to forget about the fire and defeat an equal number of rivals. It was the annual match between the Oakland members and the Elkridge Kennels of Baltimore, played at Baltimore, and resulted in a victory for Oakland, 18 to 17. The members of the victorious team were H. S. Williams, Edward R. McCall, Dr. Carlos MacDonald, Joseph A. Flynn, Lamar Hardy, Charles L. Guy, Isaac P. Upham, John Whalen, Darwin P. Kingsley, Albert Ashford, R. A. C. Smith, R. W. Poor, Frank Presbrey, Edwin B. Holmes, Lincoln Grant, John F. O'Rourke, Wilson S. Kinnear, John McKay, and Thomas McGill.

Joshua Crane, for years one of the leading court tennis players of the country, lately has taken up golf and has made rapid strides at the new game. His best achievement was in a four-ball tournament paired with William Ogg, professional at the Dedham Country and Polo Club. Mr. Crane and his partner won the event with best ball rounds of 77 and 73.

The unusual amount of business before the officials of the Professional Golfers' Association has forced the local members to open an office of their own at 366 Fifth Avenue, where all meetings will be held in the future, instead of at the Hotel Martinque, as in the past.

In three exhibitions of eighteen holes over as many different courses at St. Louis, Chick Evans, the national amateur and open champion, recently totaled 222 strokes. He had a 76 at the Algonquin Country Club, a 72 at the St. Louis Country Club and a 74 at the Sunset Hill Club. An average of 74 for three trips around strange links is exceptional and again goes to prove that Evans is a champion in his game as well as by name.

SPEEDWAY LAURELS FOR CLOVER PATCH

Murphy's Pacer Displays Top Form in Feature Event of Matinee.

J. A. Murphy's Clover Patch displayed a flash of her old-time form yesterday in winning the 1:03 pace of the Road Drivers' Association's ninth fall meeting on the Harlem speedway. The race went to three heats before it was decided. Against Clover Patch were M. F. Kearns's Lustrus McKinney and C. C. Cramer's Baron A, which finished in the order named. Jesse Smith held the reins on the old speedway champion and sent her in front by a length in the first heat and a bigger margin in the third.

The large crowd was treated to a neck-and-neck battle in the second heat, in which Lustrus McKinney led Clover Patch over the mark, by a head.

J. F. O'Shea and E. Carpenter were the day's successful drivers, each carrying off two firsts. O'Shea's David Busbey won the 1:05 trot in split heats, and in the 1:15 trot Miss Wiggins, handled by O'Shea, won in straight heats. Carpenter's victories were registered in the 1:17 trot and 1:15 trot with Catherine P. and Bessie Baron respectively. Each event went to three heats.

GOLFERS EVENLY MATCHED.

Fox Hills Pair Defeat Richmond County Duo at Twentieth Hole.

Two weeks ago A. F. Kammer, amateur leader of Fox Hills, and Tom Boyd, professional at Fox Hills, visited Richmond County and won a bestball fourball match against A. L. Walker, Jr., amateur champion of Staten Island, and Jack Pirie, professional at Richmond County, at the nineteenth hole. Yesterday Walker and Pirie repaid the visit with a trip to Fox Hills, where another exhibition of eighteen holes was announced, and this time Walker and Pirie evened up matters; but twenty-one holes were needed before young Walker got a 4 at the 230-yard third extra hole to decide the match.

Two weeks ago Boyd and Pirie paired against Walker and Kammer in the afternoon at Richmond County and won from the amateurs at the twentieth hole. Again the professionals paired against the amateurs at Fox Hills yesterday and once more twenty holes were needed before Boyd settled the issue with a 4 at the second extra hole. Inasmuch as the four involved are the outstanding leaders of Staten Island's golf world and the exhibition was for the Red Cross fund an extra large crowd was on hand.

In the morning match Walker and Pirie had 39 out and 39 in for a 78, while Kammer and Boyd took only 38 out, but were forced to come back in 40. In the afternoon affair the amateurs were three down at the twelfth, because of a 2 at the twelfth by Pirie. Walker began to play magnificently at the thirteenth, where his 4 won back one hole. At the sixteenth Walker got a 2 on the short but well trapped hole and evened the match at the seventeenth with a birdie 3. Boyd won the match at the second extra hole with a par 4, where the amateurs fell down on a comparatively easy 4 hole.

Baltusrol to Have New Course.

ORANGE, N. J., Nov. 18.—At a cost of $500,000 the Baltusrol Golf Club of Short Hills has purchased 800 acres of ground at that place. The purchase includes 140 acres, the present golf course of the club, and an additional 160 acres which adjoins. This will afford sufficient room to lay out two eighteen-hole courses. The club now has a membership of 750.

LAUDS AMBULANCE SERVICE

Rest Stations Built Along the Lines of Communication Equipped with Comforts for Soldiers.

The first report of Major Grayson M. P. Murphy, the American Red Cross Commissioner in Europe, in which he tells of the work accomplished, as well as planned, of the American organization in France, was made public yesterday by Henry P. Davison, Chairman of the Red Cross War Council.

"First of all," Major Murphy says in his report, "the American Red Cross stands ready as a semi-official voluntary body to put its money, supplies and organization at the call of the American Army for Red Cross service, at every point and at any time, wherever and whenever they can be of use. It organizes, equips, and turns over to the Government absolutely the hospital units that are employed in France. Its medical and surgical division in France acts as an auxiliary to the Medical Department of the United States Army, which is charged with responsibility for the sanitary and medical service of the troops in France. So also its United States Army Division acts as auxiliary to the expeditionary force.

"An army medical department, to do justice to its wounded, must be ready to care for them within twelve hours; it must go to the wounded soldier, not wait until the wounded soldier is brought back. This, in modern war, calls, with variations, for regimental dressing stations as near as they can be brought to the lines; field dressing stations from which the seriously wounded are sent back, either to movable field hospitals or evacuation hospitals of from 1,000 to 1,500 beds each (where head, chest and abdominal wounds must be operated upon or you lose your men); and base hospitals, to which the sick and wounded are removed as rapidly as they safely can b)e transported.

"It is with this general system of the United States Army Medical Department that the Red Cross stands ready to co-operate at every point, through installing rest stations and infirmaries on the line of communication, recuperating stations back from the war zone; neighborhood dispensaries in army villages; diet kitchens and homes for nurses; auxiliary plants for the manufacture of anaesthetics, ice, splints; a fund for scientific research and a bureau of information on methods in field hospital practice, and great and thorough reserves of emergency supplies of everything from a bandage to a mobile hospital."

After thus outlining the scope of the Red Cross work in France, Major Murphy gives in detail the story of the great work already accomplished in the war zones of the western front. He begins with a laudatory reference to the work of the Norton-Harjes Ambulance Service, which after long and efficient service in France was taken over by the Red Cross last June. Continuing, he states that the Red Cross, acting through the United States Army Division, has undertaken the work of placing in operation eighteen rest stations at proper intervals along the communication lines which connect the American ports of debarkation with the fighting lines, each of these stations being made up of from two to four barracks, 40 to 160 feet long. These stations are fully equipped with baths, laundries, disinfecting plants, kitchens, dispensaries, rest and reading rooms. The dormitories contain from 40 to 200 beds.

It is also pointed out that forty dispensaries have been established in villages and towns located in the vicinity of American camps. These dispensaries and the doctors assigned to duty in them care for the civilian population.

The report next tells of the installation of portable kitchens to serve the men in the trenches, of portable ice plants wherever needed, portable laundries and portable baths. There are also in operation portable dental ambulances to serve districts where dental rooms are not to be found; portable ophthalmological ambulances for the treatment of injuries to the eyes due to shell explosions and gas attacks when "speedy treatment may mean the saving of sight.

It is also announced that the Red Cross is about to install an artificial limb factory in France, which will supply its output to the French Government at cost. A nitrous oxide plant is also to be installed within the next few weeks. The medical and surgical division of the organization is now making an expert study of "shell shock" and is making an investigation of the methods adopted by the French for dealing with this tragic phase of war.

The medical supplies service of the Red Cross is now serving 3,617 hospitals and about 100 hospitals are being added every month. In the few months the Red Cross has directer this supply service it has tripled in size. The French railroads serve free of charge the supplies service. It is stated that the Red Cross is now busy placing in reserve a great quantity of emergency supplies.

Under the caption "Aiding Troops En Route," the report says:

> At junction points on the French lines of communication, troops going forward or back on leave often have to spend hours waiting for trains, without any means for rest or food, occasionally sleeping in the open in the rain. Canteens have been opened by the American Red Cross at four junctions through which approximately a total of 18,000 men pass a day. The troops on permission find opportunity to obtain substantial hot meals at cost price, clean sleeping quarters, proper washing facilities, a chance to change their linen, and reading, writing, and recreation rooms. They come in from the fighting zone, tired, dirty, hungry, infested with trench vermin; they take the trains out refreshed both in body and spirit. By the time the cold weather sets in this service will be covering a big territory.
> In Paris the Red Cross is supplementing the work of French oeuvres in carrying on canteens vestiaires and dortoirs, at the five chief stations and at three stations on the extra mural belt line.
> A bureau for investigation and relief follows up letters of appeal from commanders, priests, and groups of soldiers en repose, in canteens or in the trenches, and refers individual cases to co-operating French organizations.

At the present time the Red Cross Bureau in Paris is sending out from 40,000 to 50,000 surgical dressings daily, the greater amount of them made in this country. Five hospitals, under Red Cross direction, are giving direct treatment to the French sick and wounded, one of the hospitals being the famous American maintained hospital which, prior to the entrance of this country into the war, was known as the American Ambulance Hospital.

The Red Cross is also providing libraries for many of its hospitals, ten of which have been organized, containing an aggregate of about 4,000 of the best books published in the English language.

The casualty service of the Red Cross Army Division will act as an accessory to that of the United States Army, and will amplify and humanize the short reports which the army must of necessity give of men killed, wounded, or missing.

In line with this understanding, recreation huts are about to be erected by the Red Cross at nine base hospitals; eventually they will number sixty.

WORK FOR ITALIAN REFUGEES.

Major Murphy, Red Cross Director, Outlines Plans for Self-Help.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 17, (Delayed.)—Major Grayson M. P. Murphy, director of the American Red Cross in Europe, who is now in Rome to organize aid for the refugees from Northern Italy, said to the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES today:

"I have been most deeply touched and gratified by the kindness and willingness of all Italian officials to facilitate my work here. It seems to me the Italian people understand the true spirit of Americans, which is not aiding Italy out of charity, but, since she is unable immediately to send armed forces to the Italian front, is doing her best in every other way to help the nation to attain final victory and to show her sympathy with it in its hour of need.

"The most important problem at present is the immense number of refugees who are flocking from the north, homeless, penniless, and without sufficient clothing. We have already ordered a great number of garments from our reserve stores in France, which are coming as fast as they can be transported, while we have bought here a large quantity of material. We have also ordered from America many rubber, woolen, and leather goods, which it is almost impossible to purchase in Italy.

"One thing which I am most anxious to establish as soon as possible is a house for refugees' children, where they can be looked after while their mothers are out working. It is the children who suffer most in these awful times.

"One story touched me profoundly, of a poor woman, who, being ill, was unable to join the flight from her village, and intrusted her two children of 10 and 5 years respectively to others who were departing. When saying good-bye she solemnly enjoined the elder boy, whatever might happen, never to let his brother out of his sight. The two children are now sheltered at the Royal Palace, given over by the Queen to shelter the refugees, but nothing can induce the elder to let go the hand of the younger child. So the two little boys may be seen wandering hand in hand through the immense rooms of the Quirinal, longing for the loving arms of their mother.

"Another plan which I am working out is the establishment of houses where women may come to work on articles of clothing for the soldiers. Thus two objects may be attained—employment for refugees and help for the army. It is a bad plan to continue to give money to these women without employment, as they will get into ways of laziness and unwillingness to work.

"Thirty American ambulances are coming down from Paris under their own power, and in a few days will be on the Italian front. They are driven by experienced men. We hope by Dec. 6 to have 100 ambulances in the field.

"I am expecting in a few days several officials from Paris, to whom I shall explain the organization of my plans. When these are in working order I shall start for the Italian front, where I intend to spend several days, and then come back to Rome to see that everything is going smoothly."

SWANN WOULD CHECK CHARITY FEES BY LAW

District Attorney Favors Law That Will Regulate the Profits Made by Promoters.

If District Attorney Swann, in his investigation into why the Army and Navy Bazaar took in $71,475.93 and had only about $750 left to buy comfort kits for soldiers and sailors, finds no cause for drastic action, it is probable that he will send to Albany the draft of a law regulating charities and bazaars, particularly as to the amount of fees and profits allowed to promoters.

The District Attorney, in previous investigations of charitable enterprises, has found it possible to induce managers to surrender sums retained for fees and other expenses. In the case of the Army and Navy Bazaar, it is insisted by the promoters that no one made any money except an advertising man who handled the program.

It was announced at the District Attorney's office yesterday that Mr. Swann was not prepared to state his opinion whether the Army and Navy Bazaar was properly managed.

DENIAL BY GATTI-CASAZZA.

Answers Rome Reports of German Propaganda at Opera Here.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 18.—Many newspapers publish from New York denials by Gatti-Casazza of the reports circulated here that the Metropolitan Opera House was the centre of German propaganda. The Idea Nazionale gives a list of American papers from which it copied reports of German influence in the opera house. Among them were The Musical Courier and Musical America, and especially a letter, signed "True American," bitterly lamenting German domination of the musical field. "To be convinced," says the paper, "one only need read the program published by The Musical Courier of the 1917-18 season and notice all the German names of artists who only very revently have become American citizens."

The Idea Nazionale ends by saying it has heard with great pleasure that German operas have been suppressed and contracts with German artists broken.

SAVED BRITISH DISPATCHES.

American Woman Who Foiled Austrian U-Boat Was Mrs. Herbin.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The name of the American woman who, as related in a military court proceeding here last Friday, saved some important British dispatches from capture by the Austrians when an Austrian submarine held up the steamer on which Captain Stanley Wilson was taking them to Malta, by hiding them while men from the submarine searched the steamer, was revealed today. She is Mrs. E. Herbin, a widow, of New York City.

The name of Mrs. Charlotte G. Herbin was mentioned in connection with the above story in the Summer of 1916, when she arrived here from Liverpool. Mrs. Herbin said that when the Austrian submarine overhauled a Greek steamer on which Captain Wilson was a passenger, the later threw a package of papers overboard, but confided to her the most important dispatches and papers in his possession, with the request that she secrete them. Being an American, she was not searched, and later she gave the papers to Lord Kitchener in person, and for her services was presented to King George and Queen Mary, from whom she received thanks

SUNDAY CONCERTS DRAW BIG HOUSES

Gabrilowitsch Gives Piano Recital Entirely of Russian Pieces.

JOHN McCORMACK SINGS

Mischa Elman Gives Violin Concert at the Metropolitan With Two Singers.

Mr. Ossip Gabrilowitsch made the program of his pianoforte recital yesterday afternoon, in Carnegie Hall, consist entirely of Russian music. There were two sonatas, one by Glasunew and the other by Scriabin, his fifth, which had then its first New York performance. Scriabin's, like others of his "sonatas" heard here, is in one movement; in which he takes a few small and rather inconsequential thematic fragments and puts them through an elaborate series of acid disharmonies without giving them thereby any added importance or creating a musical entity that carries much conviction. But Mr. Gabrilowisch played it with great spirit and with evident conviction.

Other pieces were by Balakiref, Rachmaninof, Arensky, Tscherepnin, Rubinstein; and there were two by Mr. Gabrilowitsch himself. His playing was full of charm and poetic spirit. He was much applauded by a large audience.

Both the Metropolitan and the Hippodrome, where popular concerts were given last night, held capacity crowds, the two audiences exceeding 4,000 and 5,000, to which other musical events of the day added several thousands more. John McCormack, following his recent return to opera, was welcomed back to the concert platform by a vast outpouring of his older and faithful admirers, of whom those seated on the Hippodrome stage alone would have filled some smaller halls. The tenor sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" as he appeared in the midst of this throng, and the house rose to greet the song, but would not interrupt the singer by joining in, waiting until he finished the stanza, when there was great applause.

Mr. McCormack gave with his accustomed directness of style and pure diction two airs from Handel's oratorios of "Samson" and "Joshua," lyrics in English from Schubert, Goldmark, and Brahms, and later his Irish folksongs and pieces by Frank Tours and the Americans, Mrs. Beach, Arthur Foote, and Edwin Schneider, his accompanist. He was also assisted by a newcomer in place of Donald McBeath, the violinist, who has gone to war. André Polah, a protégé of Ysaye, was the stranger, a young man of engaging presence and musical intelligence, handicapped, as a violinist must be, in so large an auditorium and by nervousness of a début. Mr. Polah played well in his second number, including two movements from the Mendelssohn concerto. Mr. McCormack will appear next at the opera on Christmas Day.

Mischa Elman was the added star at the Metropolitan's first popular Sunday night concert to a packed house lined to the walls with standees. The Russian violinist gave the Wieniawski concerto and received enough encores to fill fifty minutes on his first appearance, with more extras after his later numbers from Wilhelmj and Paganini. Sophie Braslau sang the contralto air from Gluck's "Orpheus," and, in English, La Forge's "The Crucifix" and Manney's "Consecration." Ruth Miller, who had made her operatic début against a physician's orders, while suffering from bronchitis, was heard to better advantage as she repeated Musetta's air from Puccini's "Bohème," with Rogers's "The Star" on recall. Even the orchestra, under Hageman, took an encore. There were many men in uniform in the house, and there will be another next week on the stage, the pianist, Percy Grainger.

Two concerts at the Princess Theatre yesterday presented, in the afternoon, Arthur Friedheim, who continued his series of piano programs from Liszt and other masters, and last night Clara Pasvolsky, assisted by Vladimir Dubinsky and others, in a Russian evening, made up of composers not often represented here, and attended by as large an audience of their Russian compatriots as the little theatre would hold.

SEES HOPE IN THE DRAMA.

Professor Phelps Says Last 25 Years Have Been Fruitful.

In the course of his address on "The Drama of Today" before the Free Synagogue at Carnegie Hall yesterday, Professor William Lyon Phelps of Yale University said:

"During the last twenty-five years more drama of merit has been written in English than has been produced during any preceding period of twenty-five years since Shakespeare. Since 1892 a succession of plays has come from Shaw and Wilde—both unique men—Pinero, the great craftsman; Galsworthy, with his social and intellectual themes, and Barrie, perhaps the greatest genius of them all. In the United States within this quarter of a century fine plays have come from Clyde Fitch, Eugene Walter, Augustus Thomas, William Vaughn Moody, and Louis Anspacher.

"At present in New York more than one-half of the forty leading theatres are presenting comedies, which is as it should be. Only two or three melodramas and a few farces are on view, whereas in 1900 most of the offerings were melodramas and farces. The motion pictures have brought about this change, for the films can provide the broad fun of slapstick farce and the thrills of melodrama at 5 per cent. of the ticket charge made by the regular theatres. The movies, then, have jacked up the drama and compelled it to come to intellectual terms with itself and restore ideas to their rightful place in the spoken drama.

"The drama in Europe is close to the people, and by the repertory system the drama could be brought close to the people of the United States. What is needed here is a return to the stock companies."

CRITICISES BARNARD STATUE

St. Mark's Rector Says His Lincoln Is "a Libel and a Lie."

In the course of a short address, following the special 4 o'clock service in St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, Tenth Street, west of second Avenue, yesterday afternoon, the rector, the Rev. William Norman Guthrie, denounced the Barnard statue of Lincoln in strong terms. He spoke of Washington and Lincoln as coming from families of absolutely different type, Washington representing the aristocrat, and Lincoln, the common class.

"I never saw anything quite so disreputable as Barnard has managed to make the statue of Lincoln," said Mr. Guthrie. "It is a libel and a lie. We have it in Cincinnati, but that is unimportant. We know it is not true, but don't send it to England—they might believe it."

WHITMAN TALKS IN PULPIT.

Declares His Humility Before Men Who Have Gone to War.

Governor Whitman last night declared his humility in the presence of soldiers who are offering to sacrifice everything for their country in an address delivered at the Washington Heights Episcopal Church, Amsterdam Avenue and 153d Street. The services commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the church, and the 141st anniversary of the battle of Fort Washington, part of which took place on the site of the church.

"It makes me feel humble," said the Governor, "when I think of the 122,000 men who have marched away from homes they loved in this State to serve their country. There doesn't seem to be much that you and I can do. We give our time, our strength, our means—what is called 'doing our bit,' but compared with what these boys are ready and willing to do it is very little. I feel like taking off my hat in their presence and praying to Almighty God to make me worthy of this land I love."

'LOSING ELOISE' HAS AN AMUSING IDEA

A High-Class Farce Built About the Eloping Wife and Her Lover.

HUSBAND AS THE CHAPERON

An Exceedingly Capable Cast, including Charles Cherry, Violet Heming, and Lucile Watson.

LOSING ELOISE, a farce in three acts, by Fred Jackson. At the Harris Theatre.

Eloise Farrington	Violet Heming
Carter	S. Harry Irvine
Hilary Farrington	Charles Cherry
Darrell McKnight	Francis Byrne
Annette	Ethel Intropodi
Nora Gail	Lucile Watson
Thompson	Charles Mather
Bishop Kennelly	Charles Harbury

"Losing Eloise," which opened at the Harris Saturday night, employs most of the appurtenances of Palais Royal farce, even to a scene with four bedroom doors, the rapid use of which marks the climax of the action, but in spirit it is thoroughly cis-Atlantic, offending none of the moral proprieties. And it turns on an idea so new and essentially so true that with equal propriety it might have been used for the effects of straight comedy.

If you found your bride of a year in the act of eloping what would you do about it? Probably not what Charles Cherry does in Fred Jackson's play, but you could hardly improve on it. For Mr. Cherry is here a novelist, and on the spot he sketches out a brilliant and intricately detailed scenario in which he himself plays the leading part.

The central idea is that he shall accompany the elopers, as chaperon. They are making for the train to go West, but he urges that a Pullman is the most prosaic of places for a honeymoon and suggests that they go instead to his bungalow down on Long Island. When the lovers very naturally object, he flashes an automatic and delivers the two over to his chauffeur. He manages to be at the bungalow before them, and the trio is presently joined by a young widow to whom the eloping gallant had previously been engaged.

After two acts of this novel and vivacious house party it hardly needed the arrival of the young wife's uncle, the Bishop of Albany, to convince her that home life, however dull, is preferable.

The psychology of this husband's method is thoroughly sound. If, in spite of all he can do, Eloise leaves him, then he is prepared to believe that she is well lost. But, realizing that, in his preoccupation with work, he has really neglected her, he is determined to gain time for confession and repentance. So his manner, as he puts his finger in the elopers' pie of romance, is quite cool and collected. Mr. Cherry takes skillful advantages of a rare opportunity, and the result is endlessly amusing.

The scene of the first act in which he hooks up his wife's eloping gown and packs her trunk with the remains of her former trousseau is comedy of the first order. In the second act his management of the sleeping arrangements at the bungalow, which proves the lover's Waterloo, is occasion for the heartiest laughter. Throughout, Mr. Cherry is thoroughly the artist in suggesting a serious, intelligent, and resolute purpose beneath all his extraordinary doings.

The psychology of the wife is not as happy. Even as she arrives on Long Island she is in tears, and from that moment her ultimate fate is manifest. A better story would have resulted, and probably a more amusing one, if she had capitulated gradually, and, in part at least, as a result of realizing that her husband's strange conduct is inspired by care for her and love for her. But the situations are funny, and many of the lines; while Violet Heming is so charming, and so skillful in using her opportunities, that cavil seems superfluous.

Lucile Watson is the discarded widow, and though her part of pursuing female is less credible, or at least less sympathetic, she makes the most of it with her unfailing skill and humor.

Francis Byrne has the task of convincing us that, though this lover blunders at every turn and is completely foiled in the end, he is really an accomplished Lothario. That he comes off with credit is the result of exceptional skill.

Even the servants, S. Harry Irvine and Ethel Intropodi, seemed artists to the fingertips.

FAIRBANKS STILL ACROBATIC

Film Actor Appears in New Play, "Reaching for the Moon."

From the standpoint of ideas, the newest Douglas Fairbanks film, "Reaching for the Moon," which came to the Rialto yesterday afternoon, probably is a trifle less satisfactory than its predecessors. As a means for the exposition of the physical prowess of its star, however, it lacks nothing. In the course of an attempt to gain a throne in a mythical kingdom of Graustark dimensions the hero becomes involved in a series of rough-and-tumble encounters, for which he is celebrated, and adds to these escapades the scaling of a wall which gave no outward evidences of affording anything resembling a foothold. The negotiation at a single leap of a flight of a dozen or fifteen steps is also one of the star's new accomplishments.

At the Strand Theatre Pauline Frederick was the star in a picturization of "The Hungry Heart." "The Door Between" and "Fighting Mad" are the week's new attractions at the Broadway.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

William Faversham probably will be seen next in New York in a new play by Emile de Croissett, author of "The Hawk," which Mr. Faversham played several seasons ago. Mr. Faversham is also considering a series of Shakespearean revivals with all-star casts.

Charles Trowbridge has succeeded Robert Pitkin in the leading role of "Leave It to Jane," at the Longacre Theatre.

Seats for all performances up to Jan. 12 will be placed on sale at the Hippodrome this morning.

NEW YORK, MONDAY, NOV. 19, 1917.

AMERICA TAKES A HAND.

At the moment when British politicians are seeking to encompass the fall of LLOYD GEORGE because of his attempt to bring about unity of plan and control in military operations, President WILSON emphatically declares for the same thing. But he does more. When he says that it must be done if the great resources of the United States are to be used to the best purpose, he delivers emphatically the first reminder that this country is playing a part already that entitles it to a high place at the council table of the Allies.

The magnitude of the President's service to the common cause is beyond question. When unity has been talked of, those who talked of it have been sagely reminded that the differences of viewpoint between the European nations are such that any one of them who proposed it would be subject to jealousy and suspicion. Therefore, it was the duty of the one great nation which stood apart from European policies and traditions, whose motives could not possibly be under suspicion, to cut the knot. It was our duty, but duties often go undone and opportunities are often not seized. In recognizing the duty and seizing the opportunity the President played the part of a great statesman.

That unity which we have been told is a dream is now made possible. Insuperable obstacles become mere difficulties when the right word is spoken, and by the right man. LLOYD GEORGE spoke it, but he was the head of an interested nation, and Mr. WILSON is at the head of a disinterested one. Mr. GEORGE spoke it from the highest motives, but his motives were immediately made the target of partisan suspicion. Mr. WILSON cannot be made that kind of target. And, in assuming the leadership of the movement for unity, Mr. WILSON has really done Mr. GEORGE a great service; for his own leadership would always have been hampered by all the obstacles that partisan pettiness could invent. Now, in that movement, he has behind him all the power of the United States, the nation on which the war must more and more depend.

It will be a shock to those British politicians who were trying to use the United States for the purpose of encompassing LLOYD GEORGE's downfall; Lord NORTHCLIFFE spoke truly when he said that the United States would not stand by and see its blood and treasure sacrificed to incompetency, but he was vastly wrong when he sought to enlist that fact against the administration of LLOYD GEORGE. The incompetency which the United States dreads is precisely that incompetency to which Mr. GEORGE seeks to put an end. It is not the incompetency of Generals or statesmen, but an artificial incompetency created by disunion of command; it is the incompetency of a deadlock. Military initiative has been paralyzed by the scattering of responsibility. The President warns our allies that this paralysis must cease. This is the demand of the British Premier. Yesterday it seemed a demand that could not be realized because of partisan opposition at home and the mutual jealousies of the Allies. Now that the President has spoken, we believe that those things will shrink into their proper proportions, and that for that reason, if for no other, this is a historic day for Europe.

Not only can there be no suspicion of America's motives, but there is no avoiding her voice. This country is the storehouse and the bank of the Allies. Hitherto not a word has come from us in reminder of that fact. It has come now only because the occasion called for it. Nothing less could have brought it forth, and now it comes with dignity. This nation is faced with the prospect that the division of responsibility which has checkmated the Allies for three years shall continue, chiefly because of the political opposition to LLOYD GEORGE and the susceptibilities of certain officers. That continuance means the loss of American lives, and the President, in that unanswerable way to which his countrymen are accustomed when he speaks, announces not only the interest of America in this matter but its determination to protect its interest.

THE MASK OFF.

With diplomatic decorum, our dispatch from The Hague yesterday informed us that "the German press "and parties, with the exception of "the Socialists, are becoming dis-"tinctly more annexationist since the "victories on the Russian and Italian "fronts." Another and franker way of putting it would be that since those victories the time seems to have come for taking off the mask. If they are succeeded by defeats, Germany can pop behind the mask again.

The German Government has never said a word to support the delusion that it favors "no annexations and no indemnities." If it did, there would exist no reason for believing its word, for believing that at the first opportunity it would not wriggle out of it; but the fact is that it has said no such thing. But it has permitted German politicians and newspapers to wave that flag, for the demoralization of such of the enemy as may be foolish enough to believe it to be the German flag. When enough demoralization had been created, the Government was prepared to drop the pretense and order this species of "fraternization" to cease.

The time seems to have come. The victories referred to were victories won by the waving of that flag. Russia was wholly demoralized by it, and enough of the Italian Army was demoralized to make possible the late German victory. Now the time has come to put the flag away, to drop the mask. And yet it was to have been expected that Germany, having got such good results thus far, would go on waving the flag and wearing the mask for some time longer, so as to produce more. Is it possible that these two results were the only results it counted on and that, having got them, it expects no more? So far as Italy is concerned, that is doubtless the fact, for the actual presence of the invader on Italian soil seems to have roused a state of feeling that will permit of no more Bolshevikation in that army. The deluded Italian soldiers who stopped fighting in the expectation of seeing the enemy carry out his promise and stop too are enough of an object lesson in German faith to satisfy Italy for a hundred years. And still one would have expected Germany to go on with the comedy for the sake of its effect on the United States, where it began so musically. Has she decided that the game cannot be played on us any more than on England and France?

THE PALESTINE CAMPAIGN.

To General Sir ARCHIBALD MURRAY, who in January, 1916, succeeded Sir JOHN G. MAXWELL as commander of the forces in Egypt, belongs the credit of the strategy of the Palestine campaign. The execution of it was lately intrusted to General ALLENBY, who had made a great reputation on the western front in France. Almost every day ALLENBY reports a new success over the Turks, and he is now within striking distance of Jerusalem. Marshal HAIG evidently knew what he was about when he consented to the dispatch of his able lieutenant to the Sinai Peninsula. But the loss of ALLENBY broke up the trinity which is known in England as the H. A. G.: HORNE, ALLENBY, and GOUGH, who have done such wonderful work in Marshal HAIG's offensives.

When ALLENBY went out to Egypt the Turks had already been badly knocked about in the Sinai campaign, which in some respects was more picturesque than even the operations in Mesopotamia. It was a graveyard for the reputations of Turkish Generals and of such German military adventurers as Colonel KRESS VON KRESSENSTEIN. This officer planned the advance of DJEMEL Pasha in the Spring of 1915 by three routes across the desert of the Sinai Peninsula. The objective of the main Turkish force was the Suez Canal at a point fifteen miles south of Ismailia. There a battle was fought, in which British and French war vessels took part. The British troops included East Indians, Australians, New Zealanders, and British Territorials and Yeomanry. Their losses were insignificant, 115 killed and wounded, whereas the Turkish casualties were 900 killed or drowned in the canal and 2,000 wounded. Six hundred and fifty Turks were captured. The northern Ottoman army—its base was El Arish, on the Mediterranean—was put to flight in the neighborhood of Kantara, which is on the canal and thirty miles south of Port Said. The southern Turkish army, operating by way of Nakhl, was never dangerous. The British, if they had only known it, lost an enviable opportunity to pursue and completely rout DJEMEL Pasha's well-equipped army; but it must be remembered that the Sinai Peninsula (between Egypt proper and Syria) is in many parts waterless and a most forbidding country to operate in.

When Sir ARCHIBALD MURRAY took over the Egyptian command he decided to follow KITCHENER's tactics in the Sudan and build a railway along the Mediterranean coast route from Kantara, through Katia and El Arish, to Rafa. When he began to lay rails and water mains the Turks had garrisons at Katia, twenty miles from Kantara, and at El Arish, which was well on the way to Beersheba, the Turkish base. In Colonel KRESS VON KRESSENSTEIN, who assumed command of the Turkish forces, MURRAY had a much more formidable antagonist than DJEMEL Pasha. The Turco-German airplane reconnoissance was excellent. In raids and minor engagements the British suffered severely at first, but in a battle at Romani, between Katia and the coast, VON KRESSENSTEIN's army of 18,000 men was decisively beaten, with casualties of 9,000, including 4,000 prisoners. Thus ended the "second invasion" of Egypt. The El Arish base was abandoned by the German commander, and he left in his motor car for Beersheba.

The Sinai and Palestine campaigns are unusually interesting, in a war in which elaborate trenches figure so much, because all the fighting has been practically in the open. MAXWELL, MURRAY, and now A[illegible]LENBY have proved themselves superior tacticians to the Turkish and German Generals, and the Turkish troops have failed to hold their own with the mixed British commands. ALLENBY has had the benefit of MURRAY's scientific preparations for the advance toward Palestine. Furthermore, the new field commander is leading an army flushed with victory. As Bagdad is 400 miles and more to the east of Jerusalem, it can hardly be said that ALLENBY is co-operating with Sir STANLEY MAUDE in a general strategic plan. Sir ARCHIBALD MURRAY conceived the bold idea that the way to defend the Suez Canal was not to wait for the enemy along the line of it, but to take the offensive in Northern Sinai and strike at Palestine. This explains operations which seem so mystifying to the uninitiated.

THE ALTERNATIVE TO GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

Mr. VANDERLIP sees further into the railway question than those who think that the railways' trouble is a matter of rates. Government ownership might make the railways solvent, but Government ownership would be no more satisfactory than Government regulation, if Government management should attempt to do inconsistent things at the same time. As Mr. VANDERLIP points out, regulation and competition are not consistent with each other. The railways are directed to compete and forbidden to compete. Under the compulsion of war they are giving a demonstration of what they can do if they are allowed to do what they know ought to be done, but what the law forbids them to do. They are combining heinously. They are competing not at all. They are carrying more traffic than was ever moved on wheels before, anywhere, and they are doing it at the lowest rates in history and paying the highest costs. What business can show a better record of patriotism and efficiency? What Government railway has any such record?

All that is needed to make our railways splendid properties, scandalously prosperous, is such high rates and such low wages as rule on Government railways. It has been calculated that Government ownership rates would enable our railways to pay 40 per cent. dividends. The payment of dividends is a means to an end, the end that capital may be attracted to railway investments. The service of business is more important than the payment of dividends. The solution of the railway problem which should make the railways profitable at the cost of the taxpayers, or the reduction of the efficiency of the railways to the standards of Government railways, would be more unsatisfactory than the present basis.

No authority on railways regards our railways in the same temper as our regulators. Countless foreign observers have told us that our railways were better than theirs, and they study our ways for the sake of adopting them. Not so our regulators. They are incurable optimists about their own abilities, and incurable pessimists about our railways' competency to learn what it is sought to teach them. Well, the record is before the country. The regulators have had it all their own way for a generation. What have they settled in the way of what they undertook to do? They have corrected abuses of conduct, and are entitled to recognition and praise for that. But what have they done in the way of solving the problems of railways as servants of commerce? Has the long and short haul question been settled? It has been decided both ways, and offense has been given alternately in each direction. The subject will be brought before Congress at the first opportunity with intent to take away from the Commission the plenary discretion given to it to deal with the matter, after the disposition of Congress had failed. Were receiverships ever more numerous? Has the relation of interstate and intrastate commerce been settled in thirty years? On the contrary, a political question has been piled on the economic question. Has the relation of water and land carriers been settled by the generation of regulation? On the contrary, there is danger of uneconomic competition between them at the first relaxation of the congestion which makes both of them necessary now.

All conflicts of interests are not to be settled by Government ownership. The railway question is stuffed with more local questions than the tariff. It is not so much a matter of competition between the railways as a matter of competition of section with section, of market with market, of one commodity with another, or with a substitute. Settlement of these and such rivalries by power is not an economic settlement. The stifling of complaint is not the administering of a remedy. The bestowal of prosperity by edict, the decree of stagnation by those without responsibility except in their official places, is not the settlement of the railway question. It has been settled, within human limitations, so far as it is a matter of conduct, as to what "ought" to be done. There is no "ought" in economic affairs. The management of railways, conduct aside, is a matter of discretion, varying with conditions, and admitting of many settlements. The regulators have sought the one permanent settlement. They have thought that they were judges appointed to move the mountain towns to the coast, or the coast towns to the midcontinent. They have thought that it was their function to settle how great profits should be rather than to impose reasonable rates and allow the profits to be regulated by efficiency. The profits problem is in its worst condition. The relation of the weak roads to the strong roads never was so muddled. Government ownership is indeed a refuge for the regulators. It is another promise by those who gave us Government regulation of the sort we are enjoying. What sort of Government management would they give?

COAL ECONOMY.

The Director of the United States Bureau of Mines says that a shovelful of anthracite coal is equal in cost to a pint of cream, and a shovelful of bituminous to a loaf of bread. It is a novel idea to convert food for the furnace into equivalents of food for the body, but there is the same need for patriotism in the conservation of one as of the other. It is unpatriotic to send food up the chimney this year, and there is no man so rich that he can afford to be unpatriotic. Besides, there may be some who find it difficult to get all the coal they need this year, and others who find it difficult to pay for the coal they can get. All patriots, therefore, are interested in the hints which Black Diamond gives regarding coal economy.

That leading trade journal has found that when the wind blows consumption of coal may be doubled with little effect in heating a house. There are two ways of checking this. One way is to put an automatic damper in the smoke-pipe so that the wind will close the damper and thus stop the pull on the coal in the furnace which sends the heat up the chimney. The other way is to put a door in the smoke-pipe so that the wind will open it and allow the draught to be supplied by the air in the basement, without drawing it through the firepot of the furnace. The cost of either device is trifling, less than the saving of coal in a month, and in a season a dividend of several hundred per cent. on the investment.

Careless stoking is another preventable waste of furnace food. A firepot in which the coal is level with the feed door produces as much heat as one which is heaping full, and uses less of the black diamonds. Also in public buildings the temperature is kept too high. The custom is to overheat and allow the temperature to be reduced by opening the windows. Less heat and a more general use of air-changing devices in the windows will save much coal. Of course all this takes trouble and intelligence, than which there is hardly anything which costs less or is more valuable. The saving of a pound of coal is the same as finding money with which to buy sugar, for example. A shovelful out of the furnace is a nickel in the pocket, and that is worth while against the next offering of Liberty bonds.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Taking Much to Give but Little.

Much and serious thought will be caused, or at any rate should be caused, as a result of the disclosure that though the gross receipts of the Army and Navy Bazaar recently held in the Grand Central Palace amounted to $71,475, the profits of this elaborate enterprise, left after all expenses and commissions had been paid, were only $754.96. In other words, the larger sum came out of pockets that at this time are subjected to innumerable drains, and only a fraction of it that can be called either ludicrously or lamentably minute was used for buying the "comfort kits" to purchase which was the object of holding the bazaar.

There is no charge or suspicion that any of the money taken in was wrongfully, in the sense of dishonestly, diverted. The accounts have been properly audited and they are in sufficient detail to show just where every cent went and why it went there. But it is obvious, and only too obvious, that this method of raising money was not in this instance justified by its results, and that the excellence of the intentions moving those who arranged and managed the affair does not make up for the financial unsoundness of what was done, as demonstrated by the balance sheet.

That the showing was so deplorable may have been due, indeed, to special circumstances, and it is known that other bazaars have been far more successful in keeping expenses down and profits up. There have been too many cases, however, in which there were no profits at all, and it is somewhat doubtful if ever, except when practically all the work is done gratuitously, the ratio of cost to gain is such as to warrant the diminution effected in the amount of money taken from the generous public. When 50 per cent. commissions are paid to all sorts of agents and solicitors and big salaries are given to men competent and willing to relieve the nominal organizers of all or most of the real work involved in the conduct of one of these fairs—then the outcome is sure to be a pitifully inadequate return for the energy expended and for the total draft on the public's will and power to give.

The conclusion to be drawn from episodes like this is that bazaars and fairs and "entertainments" for war purposes, as for charitable purposes, should be under some sort of control other than that of people whose only qualification for it is a laudable desire to "do something" for a worthy object.

Poets Are Working for Italy.

An effort at war relief immune to all criticism and worthy of praise and help to the full extent of the general ability to give is that of the American Poets' Committee, which for some time has been hard at work raising money with which to buy ambulances for the Italian Army. Under the Chairmanship of ROBERT UNDERWOOD JOHNSON the interest of great numbers of our literary folk has been aroused, and not only have they given much themselves—wonderfully much, considering that their incomes have suffered seriously from the general diversion of public attention from books to war—but they have made effective appeals to many people richer than they are in behalf of the soldiers fighting so desperately in the land that has a better claim than any other to the love and respect of civilization.

Up to Nov. 17 the Poets' Committee had raised in actual cash $128,003.23, and $10,000 more of assured subscriptions were in sight. And the money collected is spent as fast as it comes in—all of it, practically—for the ambulances so much needed on the Italian front. They are already there and in service—not enough of them yet, by any means, but in numbers sufficient to save many a life that would otherwise be lost.

Each ambulance costs $1,000, and for that amount it can be equipped and put in the field. Of course, the need for them is now greater than ever, and it is likely to grow steadily as the conflict with the invaders of the Venetian plain proceeds.

Accusations Made in Haste.

There is no reason for suspecting in the slightest degree the loyalty of Mrs. GRACE HUMISTON, but there is more than excuse for believing that quite unintentionally she has allowed herself to be used by secret enemies of her country to give weight and circulation to rumors started for no other purpose than the disquieting and alarming of the American public. The accusations she has made with regard to moral conditions in and around the training camps have many resemblances to other stories reasonably ascribed to Germany's friends and sympathizers in the United States. There is the same difficulty in discovering their originators and the same absence of facts to be elicited by investigation.

Mrs. HUMISTON claims to have personal knowledge about some of the evils she describes, but she does not allow us to judge the value of the evidence she possesses or the credibility of the testimony she trusts. On the other hand, the commanders of the camps indignantly deny the truth of her charges, and they make explicit statements as to seemingly adequate precautions taken by them to assure the safety of the women who visit the camps. As the case stands, the natural conclusion to draw is that Mrs. HUMISTON's assertions are as wild exaggerations as were the like statements made in England in the early days of the war.

That there will be here as there was there a certain number of "war babies" would be denied by nobody who knows anything about human nature, but the number of them there, it was finally discovered and admitted, was not sufficiently great to make any measurable difference in the statistics of legitimacy, and it is not vain conceit to hope, or even to believe, that here and now the showing will be better than the not bad one made in England. The manner in which our recruits have been collected, the sobriety that they are preserving under no great amount of compulsion, the occupations and amusements that have been provided for their scanty leisure—all these things combine to render incredible the unsupported accusations brought by Mrs. HUMISTON.

She is a woman who gave one brilliant demonstration of ability as a detective, and she earned as well as won no little fame thereby. Now she has imperiled that fame by seeking more of it. That has often happened before with men and women as well-intentioned as herself.

J. R. LOWELL FOR TODAY.

Many of His Lines Have a Very Modern Application.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Doubtless many of your readers realize how very appropriate to the present time a number of lines of James Russell Lowell are, but though I am an Englishman, perhaps I may venture to draw the attention of others to this fact and to give the following examples:

To the people of "well balanced minds" that we have just heard of from Rome, though every country produces the species:

This weighin' things does well enough
When war cools down and comes to writin';
But while it's makin', the true stuff
Is pison mad, pig-headed fightin'.

Or this, about "Old Hickory":

He couldn't see but just one side
Ef his, 'twas God's, and that was plenty,
And so his "Forrards" multiplied
An army's fighting weight by twenty.

To the pacifists of all nations:

There's critturs yit that talk and act
For what they call Conciliation;
They'd hand a buff'lo drove a tract
When they was madder than all Bashan.
Conciliate? It just means be kicked,
No matter how they phrase an' tone it;
It means that we are set down licked,
That we're poor shotes and glad to own it.

To President Woodrow Wilson and Mr. David Lloyd George:

We wanted one that felt all chief,
From roots of hair to sole of stockin';
Square sot with thousan' ton belief
In him an' us, ef earth went rockin'.

Perhaps I may exercise my privilege as an Englishman to criticise certain members of the British House of Commons, et hoc genus omne:

The right to be a cussed fool
Is safe from all devices human;
It's common as a general rool
To every crittur born of woman.

And, finally, may I put "Sam" for "Abe," and "Bill" for "Jeff," and apply the following to the United States of America?

An' come wut will, I think it's grand,
Sam's got his will at last bloom furnaced
In trial flames, till it'll stand
The strain of being in deadly earnest;
That's what we want—we want to know
The folks on our side has the bravery
To b'lieve as hard, come weal, come woe,
In Freedom ez Bill does in Slavery.
Set the two forces foot to foot,
An' every man knows who'll be winner
Whose faith in God has ary root
That goes down deeper than his dinner.
Then 'twill be felt from pole to pole,
Without no need of proclamation,
Earth's biggest country's got her soul
An' risen up Earth's greatest Nation.

LAWYERS FOR DRAFT WORK.

H. W. Taft Says They Will Respond to President's Appeal as in the Past.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In view of the stirring appeal of the President to the legal profession in connection with the new draft regulations, publicity should be given to the effective and patriotic service which the members of the bar of this city have already rendered.

Last July the Adjutant General of the State designated a lawyer to act as the representative of Provost Marshal General Crowder in giving legal advice to each of the 189 Exemption Boards of this city. These lawyers efficiently and patriotically devoted themselves to the arduous task and have very materially contributed to the successful working of the law. Mr. Roger B. Wood, formerly Assistant United States Attorney for this district, was designated by the Adjutant General to direct the activities of the lawyers advising the Exemption Boards and deserves much credit for his work. Six lawyers designated by the Adjutant General have been performing with ability and fidelity the arduous labor incident to appeals to the District Board. Twenty-five lawyers, appointed by the United States Attorney as Special Assistants, have been aiding in the enforcement of war measures recently passed by Congress, and in other important legal work incident to the war.

The service of all these lawyers has been entirely gratuitous. They were all selected by the Government on the recommendation of the War Committee of the Bar of the City of New York, and that committee had given careful consideration to their qualifications. The War Committee was formed last Spring by committees representing the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, the New York County Lawyers' Association, the Brooklyn Bar Association, the Association of the Bar of the County of Bronx, the Queens County Bar Association, the Richmond County Bar Association, and the Lawyers' Club, to facilitate the Government in carrying into effect war measures. It began its work by a questionnaire sent to the 14,000 members of the bar of this city. About 4,000 lawyers responded, tendering their services and giving information as to their capabilities and the amount of time they were prepared to give to the public service, which enabled the committee to make a classification which, with the aid of a system of special investigation, has enabled the committee on short notice to furnish legal assistance of the kind above referred to.

I understand from the published statements concerning the new draft regulations that it is proposed to have in each Exemption District an Advisory Board of three lawyers to advise registrants as to their legal rights and the manner in which questions asked by the Government are to be answered. The organization of such boards has been rendered much less difficult on account of the experience which the lawyers above referred to have had in the working of the draft and it is probable that they will be resorted to by the Government as a foundation on which to build the more elaborate structure contemplated by the regulations. Our committee will, of course, place at the disposition of the Adjutant General and the Provost Marshal General all of its facilities for selecting the 378 additional lawyers who will be necessary to fill the quota of the boards.

Precisely what our new regulations are to be cannot be ascertained until they have been officially issued by the Provost Marshal General, but I have little doubt that in this city the members of the bar will eagerly respond to the appeal of the President and cooperate in the plans of the Government for the completion of the draft in an effective and patriotic fashion.

War Committee of the Bar of the City of New York.

Signs of the Emancipation.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

During the last election the writer served as an inspector at one of the uptown polling places. A young lady from the Woman Suffrage Party sat with us throughout, evidently for the purpose of assuring fair play to the votes for suffrage. While the men were passing around tobacco this woman asked one of the men for a cigarette, and proceeded to smoke in very nonchalant manner. After consuming the first cigarette she politely asked for a second.

The suffragettes who take to smoking in order emphatically to demonstrate their equality with the male sex grossly pervert the purpose for which the better element among women has been striving so hard. The essential purpose in giving women the vote is to grant them all the rights and privileges which belong to them, whereby they will help to elevate and better develop the community. In enfranchising the women, we beg of them, nay, demand of them, to mitigate the social and economic evils, not to enhance them.

Mrs. Humiston's Charges.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with much surprise and doubt the statements of Mrs. Grace Humiston concerning immorality in the vicinity of the camps, and it is shocking to the senses to have such statements circulated by one who is supposed at least to have some knowledge whereof she speaks. I have been indirectly connected with the United States Army in the capacity of stenographic reporter for courts-martial for about eight years, five of which were spent on the Texas border. I am constrained to say that those parts of Mrs. Humiston's statements which are not hearsay are undoubtedly creatures of her imagination. It would be hard, indeed, in any gathering of thousands of young men not to find some wrongdoers, but when women of supposed intelligence attack the entire personnel of the army, and in one recent instance it was referred to as the "khaki peril," it seems to me a halt should be called, and they ought to be made, in present-day slang, "to put up or shut up."

THE KNITTING BRIGADE.

Up and down through our country wide,
(Clickety-clack! clickety-clack!)
Needles are plying busily,
(Over and back, over and back!)
The stay-at-homes and the travelers, too—
Go where you will, they're everywhere,
Knitting away with khaki wool,
Or gray, for a boy gone "Over There"!

Needles of amber, bone or steel,
Needles fashioned of silver, gold,
Wielded by soft and slender hands,
Or work-worn fingers, gnarled and old;
Mothers and sisters, sweethearts, wives—
Every one of us boasts a pair!
Ours is the task all women love,
To hearten their men gone "Over There"!

A bag is the sign of the knitting band,
Silk or cotton, or crétonne gay,
And hidden safe in its cavern folds
Are needles and worsted tucked away.
So we knit and purl—(but, novices,
Of the perilous Kitchener heel, beware!)
Doing this service thankfully,
For the sake of one gone "Over There"!

GENERAL BELL PROPOSES A SONG.

Use of the International Anthem for Great Britain and America Should Be Encouraged, He Says.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Very gracious commendation was bestowed in the columns of your paper on the part I took in the song rally at the 71st Armory on Sunday night, Nov. 11, at which I was an honored guest. In view of this, it would seem a bit incongruous, if not ungracious, that I should choose your paper in which to disclose even one small "fly in the ointment" were I to do it in a spirit of criticism. Assuring you, therefore, that it is not in a spirit of criticism, but in a hope of helpfulness, that I am writing what follows, and trusting that what I say may find a responsive chord in the breasts of all thoughtful and impartial persons, I desire to point out an omission in the program which I am sure was due to oversight and without the slightest intention of any invidious distinction.

Though the program contained the National Anthems of France and Russia, it did not include that of Great Britain. England has taken a most prominent part in this war and the existence of its navy has exercised a most powerful influence toward the protection of neutral commerce throughout the world.

In view of recent developments on the eastern and southeastern fronts, this is certainly no fit time for our people to be indifferent or lukewarm toward the sensibilities of one of our most powerful allies. If there ever was a call for maintaining sincerely cordial, sympathetic relations with all of our allies, one is certainly sounding loudly now.

On the entry of this country into the present war an International Anthem to the tune of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" and "God Save the King" was sung (according to the press) at St. Paul's Cathedral, London. The first verse of this International Anthem was as follows:

Two Empires by the Sea,
Two Nations great and free
One Anthem raise.
One race of ancient fame,
One tongue, one faith we claim,
One God, whose glorious name
We love and praise.

And the last:

Now, may the God above,
Guard the dear lands we love,
Both East and West.
Let love more fervent glow,
As peaceful ages go,
And strength yet stronger grow,
Blessing the blest.

If, on proper occasion, the singing of these international words could be encouraged it would at the least tend to cultivate cordial relations with a nation which for many years has endeavored to manifest very cordial friendship for us.

I am conscious that this suggestion may encounter an antagonistic reception in the minds of some of our fellow-countrymen, but in making it I am inspired more by interest in the real welfare of citizens of my own country than by consideration for the feelings of any one belonging to another.

THE BEST WAR RECORD.

Pell City, Ala., Would Like to Know if Any Town Has Done More.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read in THE TIMES and other papers claims of several towns to the distinction of having made the best war record in the way of furnishing men and money.

None of these records begins to compare with that made by the little town of Pell City, Ala. Its population, including the people of the cotton mill village which is outside the municipal limits, is less than 1,500. Its total taxable wealth is assessed at about $750,000.

It sent 100 volunteers to the Mexican border, and of these forty-one men were assigned to the Rainbow Division. Practically every man liable to conscription volunteered.

Excluding the first Liberty Loan it took $76,750 in second Liberties, an average of $50 for every man, woman and child of the population, or 10 per cent. of its wealth.

It far oversubscribed its allotments to the Camp Library Fund, the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. funds.

To every Pell City man in France, on the high seas, or in training camp, it has sent a Christmas box; each costing more than $8, and prepared after consultation with men overseas. The negro troops at Fort Dodge received exactly the same gifts.

The engraved card accompanying these boxes is worth passing along as an evidence of the spirit of the South:

To Pell City's "Own": A joyful Christmas greeting and best wishes for a happy New Year.

We send this Christmas box, dedicated in love, in the hope that it will give you comfort and pleasure, pleasure in its contents, and comfort from the thought that the folks back home are thinking of you. We feel honored in having an opportunity to express, even in so small a degree, the admiration and respect we have for our soldiers, now with the colors, for the great sacrifice they are making to defend their country's honor, protect its homes and to make the world a safe place for democracy and civil liberty. We all join in a fervent and sincere petition to God to protect and keep you, and, when your duty is done, return you to us. Your sincere friends,

THE PEOPLE OF PELL CITY.

Tomorrow a thoroughbred Holstein bull calf, sired by Bayonet, dammed by Ammunition, out of Conqueror, is to be auctioned here for the benefit of the Red Cross, the buyer to donate his purchase to the Birmingham Red Cross Chapter for resale. This promises to be the highest priced animal in captivity.

Pell City offers this record for other towns to shoot at.

For School Lunches.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At the present time undernourishment and malnutrition are injuring the children of the New York City schools and nullifying the work of teachers. The Board of Health estimates that last Winter there were more than 100,000 children suffering from underfeeding. This year conditions are much worse. The increased price of milk is showing dire effects and is causing great anxiety. It is necessary for the children attending public schools to have one good hot meal a day, and there should be a lunch service owned and managed by every public school. England and France have everywhere adopted the 3-cent lunch as a war measure. The present lunch service in New York is wholly inadequate. Only thirty-five schools in Manhattan and the Bronx are provided with a lunch service. At least as many more should be equipped immediately, and this must be done by private means; the agency through which it can be accomplished already exists. The Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor has the matter in hand, and money given for the purpose will be well and wisely spent. Mr. Hoover said, "Safeguard the children in war time. It is your first duty."

A fund of $50,000 is asked for, and checks should be made payable to George Blagden, Treasurer, and sent to Mrs. Frederick Petersen, 535 Park Avenue.

Criticism of the Fusion Campaign.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In view of the frank utterance of Mr. Price on the conduct of the Fusion campaign I want to call particular attention to the vote for Borough President Marks, and to ask Mr. Price what light Mr. Marks's totals throw on the Fusion management.

Mr. Price criticised the Fusion methods, and my own and some of my friends' experiences bear him out. There was a Fusion campaign, but there was no fusion. One incident will make clear what I mean. One Saturday afternoon two weeks before election I called at the Fusion Mayoralty headquarters and inquired for Mr. Marks's headquarters. Four officials, consecutively questioned, said they knew nothing about the Marks headquarters, and two of them did not know for sure where Mr. Adamson's or Mr. Prendergast's were.

I had some share in the election of Borough President Marks four years ago, and consider that the Fusion fight at that time was as well conducted as any campaign I have known. The work was done under one roof, and Fusion meant just what it spelled.

I do not believe that Fusion would have won this year, no matter how the campaign had been managed, but I do think that there is some political significance in the fact that Borough President Marks ran ahead of Mr. Mitchel in Manhattan by 22,000, of Mr. Prendergast by 15,000, and of Mr. Adamson by 11,000.

DISLOYALTY IN SCHOOLS.

A Full Investigation of the Teaching Staff Is Demanded.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

To all citizens of New York who are eager that the reputation of the city should, as far as possible, be kept free from the stain of disloyalty, the newspapers the last week have borne good tidings. A cancerous growth of sedition is to be cut out. The Board of Education, at last awake to its moral obligations, is investigating the loyalty of the high school teachers. Already the board has transferred six and suspended three instructors, and is to begin the trial of the latter within a few days.

This is a splendid beginning, but it is only a beginning. There is a danger that at first the investigation will be energetic, but that its efforts to get at the truth and to punish adequately the potential traitors in the school department will relax as the inevitable outcry about "the suppression of free speech," "the rights of the individual," &c., rises from the throats of the Socialists and pacifists. But the investigators will commit a great wrong if they hesitate in the performance of what is their supreme duty as American citizens in high public office. Not for a moment must they allow themselves to be intimidated by the frenzied protests of foreigners masquerading as Americans, or by threats made against their own political future.

Ever since the outbreak of the war I have been hearing of the brazen, outspoken disloyalty of teachers who were intrusted with the care of the coming generation of Americans. My informants were not sensation-mongers, but reliable men and women, colleagues, in fact, of the disloyalists in question. One teacher complained of his discomfort in the atmosphere of his school, where he virtually stood alone in the midst of a pestilential pacifism. Another informed me how a high school teacher, when the children not long ago gave a celebration in honor of Joffre in Central Park, remarked loudly to bystanders: "You have been applauding one of the greatest murderers of his generation." Another teacher told me that only recently a high school instructor, American born, but of German ancestry, severely reprimanded a student "for insulting the Kaiser," because the boy had drawn, in a school paper, a cartoon of himself leading the imperial war lord by a well-deserved halter. The evidence is cumulative and widespread, and it must fill every true American with moral nausea to think of such instructors for our youth.

It would be well if the Board of Education would see to it that no disloyal individuals get into the department. This means a thorough scrutiny of the principles of all candidates for the position of teacher in training. In this matter all college instructors can co-operate by refusing to recommend to any of the innumerable teachers' agencies students whose Americanism is sickly and anaemic. These measures are severe; it is painful to have to suggest them, and it is more distressing to undertake to carry them out. But if we do not wish to see the very rivets of our social organization dissolved by the corrosive poison of an insidious anarchy we must take some such drastic action. Inspired by a clear conception of its patriotic duty, the Board of Education has begun a task which, if properly performed, will be of inestimable value to the City of New York and the country at large. At a time when there is no reason to doubt that pseudo-Americans will shout themselves hoarse in passionate criticism of the board, it is the duty of the loyal citizen to support the investigators to the very utmost of his power. Local patriotic organizations have pressed upon Congress its obligation to expel that apostle of pale Americanism, La Follette; now they can do nothing more praiseworthy than pass resolutions sustaining the board in the stand it has taken, and urging it to continue its work until democracy can be [illegible] in every classroom of the public school system of the city.

Loyal Clinton Graduates.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As President of the New York University Clinton Club and through constant communication with other Clinton Clubs throughout the colleges of the East it has been my duty and privilege to follow the doings of Clintonites throughout this section of the country. Since the entrance of this country into the world conflict it has been my special endeavor to keep track of the military activities of Clinton men. I therefore know whereof I speak when I state emphatically that the graduates and former students of De Witt Clinton High School are daily proving their loyalty in no uncertain manner.

Numerous former students of the school can be found in every branch of war service. A great number of them have succeeded in earning commissions at the various officers' training camps, and furthermore, a goodly number are now at the front engaged in the actual fighting.

Understand, this is not intended as a defense of the suspended and transferred instructors. That the action taken by the higher school authorities was justified is not to be questioned. This is, however, a strong denial and complaint against your unjust and unfounded statement in calling the De Witt Clinton High School a "notorious capital and centre of sedition."

Y. M. C. A. FUND MAY EXCEED $35,000,000

Reports Now Indicate That More Than $33,000,000 Has Been Subscribed.

FINAL DRIVE IS ON TODAY

Message from France Tells of the Urgent Need for Funds and Material for Our Soldiers.

Reports received from various parts of the country at the National Campaign Headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. War Fund yesterday indicated that the contributions before the drive ends at midnight tonight will exceed the $35,000,000 sought for war work in Europe. No figures were tabulated yesterday, but it was roughly estimated that the total contributions for the day brought the amount well above $33,000,000. New York City continued to lead the country with a total to date of $5,240,215.

Chicago was second, with $2,218,000. Pittsburgh reported a total of $1,688,000. Philadelphia was fourth with $1,449,502. Boston came next with $1,405,504, and Cleveland sixth with $1,378,127. Contributions in other cities were reported as follows:

Baltimore	$302,897
Buffalo	430,071
Louisville	140,000
Indianapolis	942,000
Hartford	258,791

Commenting on this the last day of the drive, A. H. Whitford, National Campaign Director of the Y. M. C. A. fund, said: "We enter the last day of this great nation-wide drive with confidence. More than 15,000 cities and towns have been organized and not less than 25,000 canvassing committees have been at work, represented by more than 500,000 volunteer workers. This great organization is directed by more than 1,300 campaign directors, who have given their whole time for several weeks without salary expense to the fund. As the country goes over the 'campaign top' we hope to push the canvass to the last trench, so that the best interest of our enlisted men may be safeguarded."

Cable from French Secretary.

A cable message was received at the national headquarters of the campaign yesterday from E. C. Carter, National Secretary of the American Y. M. C. A. in France, which read as follows:

"I have just returned from visiting the Americans in the front-line trenches. Their spirit is inspiring; their appreciation of associations, already being operated under shell fire, is unbounded. At the same time the principal criticism on every hand is that the American association in France is still inadequately furnished with men, money, supplies, and transports.

"Unless additional funds and material are forthcoming immediately, thousands of American soldiers during the coming cold Winter nights will be turned away from our huts because they are not large enough and numerous enough to accommodate all who wish to enter. I am confident that America will furnish all the money and workers necessary if parents at home realized that their men will knock at the doors of our huts in vain if adequate funds are not available."

Acting on this appeal, the War Council last night asked that every individual or business organization that wants to extend needed comforts to the American boys in the trenches, as well as in the camps, should make their contributions early today.

Dr. John R. Mott, General Secretary of the National War Work Council, at yesterday's conference suggested that corporations or families, with members at the front, should attach to their service flags, the red triangle of the Y. M. C. A. to indicate that they had also contributed to the comforts and needs of the soldiers in France.

Reports received at headquarters showed that the Y. M. C. A. members between 12 and 20 years of age who undertook to raise $1,000,000 of the $35,000,000 fund were rapidly approaching their goal. One hundred thousand boys are being organized for this phase of the campaign, and every cent contributed was earned by them. In many high school classes of the country the boys contributed as much as $10 per capita. In many cases among the younger boys the money was earned by cleaning sidewalks, beating carpets, washing windows, running errands, and tending furnaces. In the White Plains High School 306 out of 308 boys subscribed to the fund.

Compliment for Boys.

E. M. Robinson of this city, campaign director of the million-dollar fund for American boys, said yesterday: "The boys of the United States are rising to this opportunity in a fine way. Incomplete reports show that 44,000 boys have already pledged their services to the Y. M. C. A. fund. Regardless of what money may be raised in the general campaign, the boys will not be satisfied until they have increased their number of workers to 100,000, and have raised at least $1,000,000."

The following figures of the boys' campaign were given out yesterday:

Divisions.	No. Boys.	Amount.
Eastern	9,229	$92,290
Northeastern	11,928	119,280
Southeastern, (3 States)	1,746	17,460
Central, (12 States)	20,054	200,540
Southern, (3 States)	1,290	12,900
Total	44,274	$442,274

Returns from thirteen States were not available last night. Fifteen hundred Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. organizations and 300,000 students and Faculty members in colleges and universities have supported the campaign with a student drive for $1,000,000. This work was directed by the Council of North American Students, made up of representatives of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. and the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions. The following are the incomplete returns reported by the colleges:

Yale	$39,000
Harvard	23,000
Ohio State University	19,000
Iowa State University	22,000
Ohio Wesleyan University	4,500
Purdue University	17,800

Students have been urged not to write home for extra money in order to make contributions to the fund, but to earn the amount of their subscriptions. During the campaign the employment bureaus in many of the universities have been swamped with applications for positions.

ITALIAN WAR FUND SOARS.

Contributions for Poets' Ambulances Last Week Reached $14,602.65.

The Poets' Ambulance Fund for Italy announced Saturday night that the week just closed had been the most favorable one for its fund, the total contributions for the week being $14,602.65, which, added to the amount already announced, makes the cash receipts $123,003.23. There are further assurances of at least $10,000 to the first.

Gifts of $2,000 each were made last week by the following persons and organizations: Mrs. Charles Stewart Smith of New York, in honor of Charles Stewart Smith; Mrs. Katrina Trask of Saratoga Springs, in honor of St. Francis of Assisi; Mrs. Hiram W. Sibley of New York, Miss Sara S. Lawrance of New York, in honor of Savonarola; Comitato Pro Italia of the Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania, through Mrs. Benjamin Miller, in honor of Elizabeth Barrett Browning; Caroline H. Worth, per Comitato Pro Italia of the Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania, in honor of John G. Whittier. Subscribers of The Chicago Tribune, in honor of Mark Twain, made their third contribution of $2,000.

The Indianapolis Star added $238.15 to the $2,100 already announced in honor of James Whitcomb Riley. W. K. Richardson of Boston sent $100. The Circolo Italiano of New Haven contributed $58, which is a second contribution. Mrs. William H. Walker gave $50. These, with the miscellaneous contributions of $161.50, made up the week's total of $14,602.65.

In view of the increased emergency the committee is asking for contributions of $5,000 and $10,000, so that its work may be made more effective at once. Forty of the ambulances provided by the committee are now carrying the American flag on the Italian fighting line, ten more will be added next week and others later. There is also demand for field hospitals, costing the same as an ambulance, $2,000 each, which, like the ambulances, will bear the name of the donor and of any one in whose memory or in whose honor they may be given. Checks should be drawn to the order of George A. Plimpton, Treasurer, and sent to R. U. Johnson, Chairman, at 70 Fifth Avenue.

THEATRES IN RED CROSS AID

Davison Thanks Profession for Designating Day to Help Fund.

Henry P. Davison, Chairman of the War Council of the American Red Cross, yesterday thanked the theatrical profession of the United States for designating Friday, Dec. 7, as Red Cross Theatre Day throughout the country. Special performances will be given, the proceeds to be devoted to the Red Cross war fund. No war tax will be charged on tickets sold for the performances.

Speaking of the patriotic action of the theatrical profession, Mr. Davison said: "It is due to the loyal co-operation and generosity of the entire theatrical profession in voluntarily mobilizing all the resources of its industry for one day that such a splendid contribution to the Red Cross is made possible. The spirit that prompted the theatrical profession to dedicate its efforts toward relieving the necessity of our soldiers and our allies has entered into the entire personnel of the American stage, every producer and star, down to the minor actors and musicians having gladly offered their free services for the Red Cross."

Arrangements for the celebration of "Red Cross Theatre Day" are in charge of a special committee composed of A. L. Erlanger, E. F. Albee, David Belasco, Marc Klaw, Lee Shubert, Charles Dillingham, Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., J. J. Shubert, Sam H. Harris, George M. Cohan, Archie Selwyn, and Henry W. Savage.

MISS PAUL REMOVED TO PRISON HOSPITAL

Transferred from Psychopathic Ward on a Stretcher, She Writes in Smuggled Note.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Miss Alice Paul, the suffrage leader and picket, who is serving a seven months' sentence in the Federal prison here, has been removed from the psychopathic ward to the hospital section of the prison, according to a note written by her and smuggled from the institution. Her note, given out by the National Woman's Party managers, says she was carried from one ward to another on a stretcher, perhaps too weak to walk on account of her hunger strike and forcible feeding.

Miss Paul's story, as told in her note, follows:

"Miss Winslow and I are at opposite ends of this building, each locked in her room, with an iron barred door. I saw her as they brought me on a stretcher from the psychopathic ward, but have not seen her since. We are each in a ward with three windows. Today they nailed two of my windows shut so that they cannot be opened. The third window has been nailed shut at the bottom, so that the only air I have now is from the top of one window.

"This was done by the order of Dr. Gannon. He seems determined to deprive me of air because air was one of the things we demanded in our letter asking for recognition as political offenders. We have, of course, been deprived of everything else that was included in our original demand—letters, books, visitors, decent food, except as they force it upon us through tubes. Two weeks ago they did give us letters like this one, on the back of which I am writing.

"I was in the psychopathic ward just a week, and was only released, I think, because of Mr. Malone's efforts. It was apparently an attempt at intimidation.

"Dr. Gannon said that if I persisted in hunger-striking he would 'write a prescription' to have me taken to the psychopathic ward and fed forcibly. I was thereupon placed upon a stretcher and taken there. Dr. Gannon, another doctor and several nurses then proceeded to feed me forcibly.

"As he was leaving the room Dr. Gannon turned to the nurse and instructed her to 'observe' me. The nurse 'observed' me once an hour through each night, coming to the door and turning on an electric light, which was flashed into my face. At first I wakened each time. After a while I grew accustomed to it.

"In addition to this little device of observing, they used other means to make one know one's sanity was doubted. A Dr. La Conte came and examined. Dr. La Conte then told me I was not in a mental condition, as I must, of course, know, to judge of things for myself. He and two other doctors and three nurses fell upon me and took samples of my blood by force.

"I was locked in my room, so I did not see the other inmates except once or twice, when they came down the corridor and looked through my bars. One could hear them, however. The last morning I was there cries began at 5:30. I turned on the light to look at the time. The cries had probably awakened me.

"The morning before they began when it was still dark. I did not ascertain the time. When one person starts shrieking the others usually join in and continue for an hour or two. Then all would be silent for several hours, when the cries would be resumed.

"One day when I had a new nurse, she introduced herself thus: 'I know you are not insane.' She was endeavoring to be kind, but it was staggering to have people express their friendliness to you by assuring you that they did not consider you insane!"

SUFFRAGE VICTORY LAID TO GERMANS

Mrs. James W. Wadsworth Says They Gave Women 110,000 Votes in New York.

SEES PLOT TO STOP WAR

Senator's Wife Declares Anti-American Forces Are Backing Federal Amendment.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, wife of the New York Senator, after a conference here with leading opponents of woman suffrage, issued a statement today in which she warned the country against what she characterized as pro-German and pacifist influence back of the suffrage movement at this time.

Mrs. Wadsworth says that, in the recent New York election, German support which went to Hillquit, the Socialist candidate, also went for woman suffrage. She asserts that pro-German and pacifist influences are working to have the suffrage referendum put through Congress and then passed by the necessary two-thirds of the States, so that later, in another referendum, women will be counted on to vote the country out of the war.

Mrs. Wadsworth links socialism, suffragism, and pacifism in an alliance, and says it is necessary for the voters of the country to throw the weight of their influence against it. To that purpose she directs her statement to the women of the twenty-five states in which, she says, there are 350,000 women enlisted in anti-woman suffrage organizations, urging them to work hard to combat the effect of the suffrage campaign.

In analyzing the Hillquit vote of 142,178, Mrs. Wadsworth points out that this was a gain of 110,021 votes over the normal Socialist vote of 1913 and 1916. During those three years, she says, the real Socialist vote did not increase 1,000. In 1910, she says, there were 102,513 German born men of voting age in New York, and their number was increased sufficiently to accurately account for the 110,021 votes that went to Hillquit.

These voters, Mrs. Wadsworth declares, marked their ballots for Hillquit and also voted for woman suffrage. She alludes to the defeat of woman suffrage in Ohio as compared with the vote in New York as evidencing the influence of pro-Germanism.

Mrs. Wadworth's Appeal.

In her letter to the anti-suffrage leaders Mrs. Wadsworth says:

The New York suffrage victory may prove a means of arousing the people of America to the peril of woman suffrage. An analysis of the New York vote shows that suffrage was carried there by pro-Germans and pacifists. The inclosed statement proves this clearly. Therefore, suffrage in New York has raised a greater issue than ever before.

It has helped suffragists in their efforts to force the Federal amendment. The next step after the Federal amendment would be the demand for a referendum—to men and women voters—on this war!

Nothing could so divide our country or help the Kaiser. With Russia and Italy defeated by internal discord and socialism, every patriotic American must be brought to realize that doubling the electorate at this time might lead to defeat in this war.

We must arouse every real American man and woman to this menace of the triple alliance—socialism, suffragism, pacifism.

Will you add the weight of your influence to carry these facts to the people of your State?

ALICE HAY WADSWORTH.

The statement accompanying the letter reads:

"How pro-Germans and pacifists forced suffrage upon New York:

"Woman suffrage was carried in New York by pro-Germans, pacifists, and Socialists. The election figures prove it.

"The suffragists actually polled fewer votes outside of New York City than they did in 1915, but the pacifist, pro-German, Socialist vote cast for Hillquit carried woman suffrage.

"Hillquit ran on a pacifist platform. He opened his campaign by speaking in German to German-Americans. He insisted that every man who voted for him should not only vote, but work for woman suffrage.

"The Socialist gain, the suffrage, and the number of German voters is similar in every borough of Greater New York.

"Mr. Hillquit polled 142,178 votes. This was a gain of 110,021 votes over the legitimate Socialist vote of 1913 and 1916.

Calls It Anti-American.

"The proof that this was not a legitimate Socialist vote, but a pro-German, pacifist, anti-American vote, is found in the fact that in three years, from 1913 to 1916, the regular Socialist vote of Greater New York did not increase 1,000. Russell, the Socialist candidate in 1913, received 32,057 votes. Benson, the Socialist candidate in 1916, received only 31,787 votes, and the Socialist Labor candidate received only 1,333 votes in New York City.

"Hillquit gained this sudden, significant increase of 110,000 votes in a city where, according to the United States census of 1910, there were 102,513 German-born men of voting age, naturalized or with first papers. This was in 1910. Since then the number of German-born men who have rushed to obtain American citizenship is enough to explain the entire Hillquit increased vote of 110,000 very significantly.

"As these men, one by one, marked their ballots for Hillquit—and against the war—they thought the secrecy of the ballot box would shield their submarine attempts to stop this war. But the figures expose this trick unmercifully. The United States Government has already announced its discovery that pro-Germans throughout the country were using Socialism as a shield for sedition.

"Consider these facts:

"In Manhattan there were 40,786 male voters of German birth.

"In Manhattan there were 37,306 more votes cast for Hillquit than any other Socialist candidate ever received before. There were 32,440 more votes for woman suffrage than in 1915. There were 32,486 fewer votes against woman suffrage than in 1915.

"In Brooklyn there were 34,100 male voters of German birth. In Brooklyn the Socialists gained 36,631 votes, the suffragists gained 35,027 votes, and the anti-suffragists lost 31,890 votes.

"In the Eighth Assembly District the anti-suffragists won—where the lowest Socialist vote was cast and the smallest Socialist gain was made.

"In the Twenty-second Assembly District, where the largest suffrage vote was cast, the Socialists also made their greatest gain and polled their largest vote.

"In the entire city, the Socialists received 107,805 more votes than the largest previous Socialist vote in every borough.

"In the entire city, the suffragists received 95,913 more votes, and the anti-suffragists 79,538 fewer votes than in 1915.

"Even in their difference, the figures are significant.

"If, as Mr. Hillquit said, 'all these Socialist votes were cast for the woman suffrage amendment,' the suffrage and Socialist gains would be the same—unless the suffragists lost 12,000 votes, and the anti-suffragists gained 16,000 votes from other causes."

DEBT OF SUFFRAGE TO CATHOLIC WOMEN

Review of the Work of the St. Catherine Welfare Association for Votes for Women.

Among the organizations which contributed to the many causes which brought about the enfranchisement of the women of New York State is one of Catholic women, who say that in the general rejoicing and the thanksgiving to the workers, their part has been overlooked. They are the women who, in their work for what they felt would be social betterment, did not forget their religion, and organized under the patronage of St. Catherine of Siena, as the St. Catherine Welfare Association. They were undoubtedly an important factor in the victory which came to the women on Nov. 6.

Miss Winifred Sullivan, a New York lawyer, and Miss Sara McPike, Executive Secretary of the advertising department of a large corporation, organized the Catholic Women's Association. They had with them Mrs. Anna Sands O'Shea, who had been an active suffragist for forty-two years.

Miss McPike, who from the beginning has been at the head of the organization, and the members felt that there was a general feeling that the Catholic Church, as a whole, was opposed to the enfranchisement of women and one great aim of their work was to prove to the world and to Catholics that this was not true. A factor which they had against them was the opposition of Cardinal Gibbons. The Cardinal was cited by the anti-suffragists as one of their supporters.

The Catholic women, working under the patronage of St. Catherine of Siena, with the reverence of their faith, turned their attention to changing the views of the eminent prelate. They wrote him many letters, asking him at least to "desist from giving aid and consolation to the enemy," the anti-suffragists. Their efforts culminated in a pilgrimage of Catholic women of many cities to Baltimore, where they were graciously received by the Cardinal.

"You here?" said the Cardinal, at that time, recognizing a member of his congregation in Baltimore.

"Yes, your Eminence," replied the woman addressed, "and you know that I am a good Catholic and a good home woman, although I am a suffragist."

Cardinal Gibbons at the time seemed much impressed by the appeals of the women, and said to them at parting:

"You know that it is hard for one who has held decided views for fifty years to change them, but to err is human—to persist in error is wrong."

This visit to the Cardinal was one of the most important single endeavors of the Catholic women, and undoubtedly strengthened their position, for they said from that time the anti-suffragists had no new statements to quote from Cardinal Gibbons.

Organized on Jan. 7, 1911, in the Convent of Peace, 225 West Fourteenth Street, the Catholic women worked strenuously. Large numbers of the Catholic clergy came out in their support, among the more prominent being Mgr. Brann, Mgr. McMahon, Mgr. Penny, Mgr. Power, the Rev. James J. Driscoll, and the Rev. John Talbot Smith. The Rev. Andrew Egan, St. Mary's, Jersey City, was the first priest east of the Mississippi to speak at a suffrage meeting. Others favoring the women were the Rev. John Talbot Smith, the Rev. John J. Dooley, the Rev. P. J. Mahoney, the Rev. William Livingston, the Rev. Joseph F. Smith, the Rev. Thomas F. Murphy, the Rev. Joseph F. Flannelly, the Rev. John McGrath, the Rev. Richard Ormond Hughes, and the Rev. M. F. Duffy. Before its formation the association had the indorsement of the Vicar General of the Archdiocese of New York, the Right Rev. Mgr. Joseph F. Mooney.

The women worked along the lines of the Woman Suffrage Association, with which they were affiliated. They appealed to Catholic editors and leaders of thought, and articles of Father Joseph P. McMahon and Father Ross were mailed to every Catholic clergyman in the United States. They preached votes for women to the sodalities of the Church and to the fraternal organizations, and their members were recruited from different women's Catholic organizations. Discussions were held before societies of Catholic men and the women spoke before the State and national conventions of Catholic organizations. They held public suffrage meetings in Catholic school halls and the Catholic press aided them. Father Hudson, editor of The Ave Maria, was the first Catholic editor in America to sponsor votes for women. His example was followed by men of the intellectual status of the Rev. John J. Burke, C. S. P., the Rev. James J. Driscoll, the Rev. John A. Ryan, and the Rev. John J. O'Rourke. Besides the many earnest workers on an advisory council were such women as Miss Janet Richards, Mrs Schuyler N. Warren, and the Countess Spottiswood Mackin.

The work of the association in the future, Miss McPike says, will be to continue to "bring home to Catholic women the truth that free government, next to the Christian religion, is the greatest boon the human race has achieved, and that suffrage is a sacred obligation." It will continue to work for good social conditions for women and children, and will urge upon Catholic voters "the impressive truth that unless they place themselves unequivocally on the side of real social reform the Socialist Party, with its sinister doctrines in regard to morality and religion, is sure to increase its voting strength."

WILL TEACH ALIEN WOMEN.

Immigrants to be Personally Instructed in Use of the Ballot.

The National Americanization Committee, of which many of the most prominent men and women of America are members, has issued an appeal to women to form suffrage organizations for the purpose of calling personally on immigrant women, and holding classes to teach them to use the ballot.

"Except by direct canvass," the appeal states, "we have not even a way of knowing how many of these women are citizens. There are in the City of New York many thousands of immigrant women, whose husbands or fathers have met certain minimum citizenship qualifications, but who have never met those tests themselves.

"In order to make the vote of the foreign-born safe for America we must bring American influence in practical terms to these new voters. And the only possible way of doing this is to reach the individual, not the group. We cannot go to her in terms of the ballot box and high-brow civic education. American citizens who seek her must be prepared to answer the things she wants to know."

WAR MOTORETTES SCORN TAXI WORK

Captain Helen Bastedo Tells Why Trained Women Chauffeurs Quit Auto Corps.

ORGANIZE A NEW UNIT

No Pulling and Hauling of Grande Dames to Meetings Will Be Tolerated, Say the Seceders.

The secession on Saturday of the bulk of the membership of the Motor Corps of the National League for Woman's Service, who are going to form their own organization for direct Government service, independent of the league, was due to the fact that the highly trained motor drivers of the corps were being used to do work for which taxis and motor trucks would have served equally well, according to Captain Helen Bastedo, commander of the corps, who led in the withdrawals.

"All the women motor-car drivers in this department are very carefully trained," said Captain Bastedo yesterday, "and what we want is direct Government service, either as ambulance drivers or for dispatch work, of a kind for which our skill and training fit us. But we weren't being used altogether for that. A good deal of our time was taken up with doing taxi work for leaders of the league.

"I know what our training is worth, for I studied the training of women dispatch and ambulance drivers in England and modeled our system on that with such improvements as experience suggested. Before a woman can qualify in our corps she must pass a stiff examination in mechanical proficiency, must have her State chauffeur's license, must be a graduate of the emergency first-aid course at St. Luke's Hospital and then do a month of work on probation before she can get our uniform.

"We went into the service because we wanted to serve the Government of the United States directly, and serve it in a way for which our training qualified us. We have done a good deal of work of that sort for the army, the navy, the secret service, and various branches of the Government. Many of our members, as dispatch drivers, have carried high officers of the army or navy of the United States, or the Allies about New York. Last week, when a large party of German diplomats, returning from the Orient under a safe conduct, passed through New York, the Secret Service called on us for fifteen cars on an hour's notice, and we furnished them, every one equipped with a highly trained driver.

"But in addition to this work, which we wanted to do, we found that we were constantly being called on to take officers or important members of the League for Women's Service about the city, or to transfer supplies to some of the canteens or other institutions operated by the league. Now, I have no doubt that this was all done in perfectly good faith, but the point was that these women, who were carried about to various parts of the city on the business of the league, were in almost every case perfectly well able to hire taxis, and our time was simply being taken up to no avail in work than any taxi driver could have done as well. As for the movement of supplies, motor trucks could have done that; and there seemed no point in using our carefully trained drivers for work of this sort.

"When I resigned, seventy-five of the seventy-nine members of the corps resigned with me, and of the four who are left only two have cars. Nearly all the girls who resigned with me were contributing their own cars to the service. We have reorganized as the Motor Corps of America, with offices at 19 East Fifty-seventh Street. Herbert L. Satterlee and John Barrett, who served as members of the Advisory Council when we were a branch of the league, will serve on our own Advisory Council in future. We want to work for the Government without having to waste time running errands for the leaders of any incidental organization. The Government knows what we can do, and we are eager for as much service as we can possibly render. But we want it to be for the Government; we don't want to save taxi bills for the leaders of a woman's auxiliary."

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION IN AMERICA AND EUROPE

The most hopeful aspect of last week's unsatisfactory stock market was the decided contraction of activity in the latter half of the period. The week's net changes, both in stocks and bonds, were again nearly all on the losing side. Whatever evidences of improvement have come to light have been ignored, and the possibility of the restoration of an investment market in which corporations can borrow money has been further removed. The week's transactions, because of the sudden narrowing of the list beginning Thursday, were a little more than half of those of the previous week and but little above one-quarter of the dealings for the corresponding period a year ago. The declines have been accompanied all along by liquidation that took no account of the reduction in quoted values. The smaller totals reported on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday seem to support the view that this liquidation has been about completed so far as forced by the existing conditions. The stock market is generally reflecting expected happenings fully as much as events that have transpired. It has been taking stock of all the unfavorable signs affecting business at a time when everything should be passed upon with respect to its bearing upon the country's prosecution of the war. Rather rapidly now the nation is appreciating the size of the task that it has joined, and still people must go much further in the direction of denying themselves luxuries than they have yet reconciled themselves to doing. A foretaste of what must be conceded to war's demands has been supplied in the discrimination raised against freight shipments not essential to the maintenance of war business. Trade continues at high pressure, but with great fundamental changes in its distribution. The Government's own needs are entering much more largely each day into the production of raw materials, transportation, and manufacturing.

The tribute paid by Lord Northcliffe in his letter to the British Premier to the energy with which the United States is bending its efforts to winning the war was gratifying, as coming from a particularly keen observer who left these shores after unusual opportunities to weigh the results of the countless economic changes that have taken place in the past six months. There has been plenty of lost motion; prices have been fixed only to be readjusted soon afterward; mistakes have been made in levying taxes that have proved painfully expensive; the orderly methods of business development over a score of years have been ruthlessly rejected, but the net effect of it all has been wonderfully encouraging. The best brains of the country have volunteered in the nation's service. A huge army is in the making and a very large part of it has already begun to count in the pressure against the Germans on the western front. Existing shipyards have been speeded up and new ones rushed to completion. The naval forces have been giving a good account of themselves and have undoubtedly played no small part in reducing the losses by submarines. Nearly $5,000,000,000 has been raised in war loans and machinery set in motion to collect another $2,000,000,000 in taxes. The railroads have been brought together by the War Board and have increased their work without additions to their facilities. Smoother changes might have been effected at the cost of delaying the help which the Allies have begun to receive, but on the whole the violent readjustments that have been made necessary have been effected with a minimum of disturbance. The United States is making its resources felt months sooner than the German authorities expected, as the first casualties reported testify. From now on the honor roll will grow more rapidly, and the absolute importance of relegating to future time all activities not concerned with the restoration of peace will be brought home to all.

The security markets have clearly reflected the public's uneasiness over the far-reaching changes taking place beneath the surface in the railroad world. For a long time it was believed that an increase in rates was a panacea for all railroad troubles. It is now becoming understood that, after all, any increase in rates during the war can bring but temporary relief. To borrow money the carriers must have such a margin over their fixed charges that reasonable regularity in their dividend payments is assured. Without credit the companies cannot keep up to the work that is put upon them. If it could be demonstrated in dollars and cents that a 15 per cent. addition to revenues would restore the carriers to the position they held before the war, the expected award of that amount would tend to hold prices of stocks and bonds up to a level that would make it possible for the companies to come to the investor for new capital. As a matter of fact, the railroads could not borrow the sums they ought to have, even if their earnings were still ample to pay satisfactory dividends. The Government has probably absorbed about all of the capital which investors have at their command. No less than the railroads the industrial corporations, even those earning big profits, have been unable to float loans at fair rates of interest. The inevitable conclusion is that the Government must assume a direct interest in the welfare of the railroads by either advancing them money at a low rate of interest with which to buy rolling stock, or by itself making such purchases of equipment to be allotted among the roads at a fair rental. A breakdown in the transportation service this Winter would be much more than a national calamity; it would be felt immediately in the war. While the Interstate Commerce Commission is giving ear to the stock arguments against the rate increases which were rightfully considered during previous hearings, a truer conception of the real questions involved is taking hold in the public's mind.

The Stock Exchange authorities have wisely overridden those who believe that no interference with the activity of speculators should be brooked. It has tacitly admitted the possibility of evil effects upon the nation's finances resulting from unrestricted professional activities. In calling for records of the transactions of its own members on the floor it has provided itself with the facts upon which it can formulate restrictions if it should become evident that the violent declines in security prices has been in any measure due to bear raiders. It may require courage to cut the privileges of membership on the Exchange, but the broader consideration of public good should make this outweigh selfish objections. The Government must float other loans as the war goes on, and every facility should be extended to investors to realize the best prices possible upon corporation and municipal holdings which they have to sell to meet their requirements. It may have been more than a coincidence that the downward movement in the past week was abruptly checked immediately after the demand that complete information should be supplied the Governors as to the volume of professional transactions.

LONDON WAR STOCKS RISE.

Effect of Changed Military Situation—War Bond Sales Slump.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—Stocks were more interesting than active the last week, the markets being less susceptible to the influences of the Russian upheaval, due to the publication of encouraging figures on submarine destruction, the British success in Palestine, and the evidence of a stiffening of the Italian resistance to the Austro-German advance. The Prime Minister's speech in Paris, which suggested possibilities of political differences in this country, was without influence, and the week closed with sentiment improving, for which Lord Northcliffe's reference to the great war effort of America was partly responsible.

Public attention was directed chiefly to securities likely to benefit by a prolongation of the war, notably armament and kindred shares, which improved sharply, among them issues which had been long conspicuous for their dormant quality.

Many shipping shares rose substantially, and further amalgamations were reported, and rumored denials did not interrupt the advance. The investment sections were quietly firm and the railways market was inactive. Argentines were weakened by renewed labor disorder, despite the fact that the dividend on Buenos Aires & Pacific second preference shares was above expectations. Mexican issues were weakened by the report of the reappearance of Villa.

The sale of national war bonds for the week ended Nov. 10 was £9,800,000, against £12,338,000 the previous week. This was disappointing, and there has been much discussion of the desirability of reducing bankers' allowance on deposits and the rates offered on competitive Treasury bills in order to stimulate the sale of bonds, but no action has as yet been taken. There were considerable purchases of Treasury bills the first days of the week, owing to the possibility of lower rates, and money was in strong demand, but was easier at the close. Discounts were idly steady.

GAIN IN STATE REVENUE.

Receipts Exceed Expenditures by Nearly $5,000,000, Controller Shows

ALBANY, Nov. 18.—A gain of nearly $5,000,000 in the State's revenue receipts despite $1,500,000 increase in expenses was revealed in State Controller Travis's financial report, made public tonight.

Since July 1 the transactions for the general purposes of State Government indicated that the total revenues aggregated $26,355,012.55, against expenditures reaching $21,420,818.99. This excess amounted to $4,934,193.56.

Of the total receipts collected, $24,588,994.27 came from special or indirect taxes, a decrease of $2,069,561.07. This lose is due to the falling off in the excise and inheritance receipts and direct taxes.

To the Thrifty

It was the army of small investors who contributed materially to the wonderful success of the first and second Liberty Loans.

It was the same army of buyers who largely sustained the stock market during its recent depression and prevented the demoralization which usually accompanies such declines.

It is the same army of buyers who, now educated to the blessings of thrift, save while they invest.

There is no better way to win a competence than to buy well seasoned securities on the Partial Payment Plan. Prevailing low prices present many real opportunities for beginning your thrift program.

You Need 6% Today

UNDER present day conditions, an interest rate of 6% or thereabouts is an actual necessity to investors. Six per cent is needed to meet the increased cost of living and the tax burdens caused by the war, and to average up the interest return on your Liberty Loan holdings and other low rate securities.

PRESENT day investors demand 6%. First mortgage bonds, safeguarded under the Straus Plan, meet that demand. They are safe, they do not fluctuate or decline in value, and they yield 6%.

AN interview with one of our officers will post you on these safe bonds, which will meet your strictest requirements and afford you a sound and satisfactory investment, backed by thoroughgoing bond House service. Call, write, or 'phone for

It is the business of Dow, Jones & Co. and of The Wall Street Journal to present all the facts and factors that finally determine investment values.

It is the business of the investment and speculative markets to make the prices. Quotations at times represent premiums on values, and at other times the same values are quoted and sold far below their investment worth.

The wise investor makes thorough study of asset values and then closely follows the financial currents that so often run counter to asset values.

Then after due consideration, he salvages values from the speculative currents.

And all the time he studies values and the factors that make and unmake values.

The great investment interests of the United States daily study the columns of The Wall Street Journal.

Investment interests in this country are steadily broadening. Shareholders and bondholders are increasing and The Wall Street Journal circulation is greater than ever and steadily gaining.

No man of affairs can afford to be other than a daily reader of

United States Steel

How far below asset values are the market quotations for the common stock?

Earning prospects under new prices established by the Government.

Actual additions to assets compared with present market value of common stock.

Will steel orders show an increase on a basis of Government steel prices?

This is the first of a number of analytical articles on United States Steel, the independent steel companies and the steel industry in general, that will appear from time to time in The Wall Street Journal, News Bulletins and ticker service of Dow, Jones & Co.

In these times of war uncertainties and sudden and vital changes in conditions, every shareholder of a steel company should keep posted.

Dow, Jones & Co.'s News Bulletins of November 19th will contain a timely article on United States Steel. Publication will also be made in the evening and following morning editions of The Wall Street Journal.

It should be read by every investor.

The Dow-Jones Bulletins will be found in all well equipped financial offices.

WAR TO GIVE NEW FINANCIAL SYSTEM

Writer in The Americas Suggests an International Credit Arrangement.

GREAT BRITAIN A PARTNER

Present Co-operation Between Her and United States Will Probably Continue After Peace.

The possibility of an international financial system growing out of the various emergency measures taken by the allied Governments in financing the war, which may survive the return of peace and become one of the permanent and highly important changes in world organization resulting from the present struggle, is discussed in the November issue of The Americas, the magazine of the National City Bank. It traces the beginnings of such an international credit system in the financial arrangements entered into by the United States and Great Britain, and suggests a future arrangement which may become one of the cardinal points in a future "League of Peace."

"The United States and Great Britain," the writer begins, "are at this moment working together so closely in financing their buying and selling with the rest of the world that the two nations are becoming practically partners in worldwide business relationships. The co-operation in its present degree is developing a situation that will with hardly any doubt make it to the advantage, or the necessity, of the two nations to go still further in it, and if the war lasts for several years we may see a coalition of many more of the countries in every continent that have declared war against Germany, formed for the purpose of supporting economic activities necessary to defeat the Central Powers."

The article then declares that the beginnings of this new international order in finance date back to 1915, when England established a bank credit here with $100,000,000 in gold, which, if she had directly exported it, would have paid for only that amount of her obligations here, but which, used as a bank credit, became the basis for settling many times that amount of indebtedness. This policy was continued in the mobilization of British-owned American securities and making them collateral for the Anglo-French loan of $500,000,000. "She bridged the gap between the internal credit systems of the two nations, and did, in a very big way, an absolutely new thing in the finance of world commerce.

"There may be a financial mobilization of the countries at war with Germany," the writer adds, "in which even the inactive belligerents will take part, effecting a consolidation of their credit. Such a consolidation might take the form of simple arrangements between countries like the one already effected, by which each other's financial agencies are able to expand the credit-creating effect of gold, or it might be in the form of credits voted for allied war purposes. It might go so far as the establishment of an international currency to run for the period of the war and a term of years thereafter, based on the bonds of the nations and a safe deposit of gold. War's interference with commerce has caused a very important general movement, regardless of international political connections, for deposits of gold by the banks of one country in banks of another, and this is regarded by some as practically the beginning of a general development of international credit."

APPEALS TO LABOR PATRIOTS

Must Rush Ships to Support Boys in Trenches, Says Gray.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—In an interview tonight in which he stated that the shipbuilding program must be rushed to completion if the war was to be won, Judge George Gray of Wilmington, Del., a member of the War Shipping Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, called upon the workmen and employers of the nation to do their utmost, as a patriotic duty, to back up the men who had gone to the trenches.

"There is no exaggeration," he said, "in the statement that the necessity for adequate production of ships is the most serious matter that now confronts us in this greatest crisis in our country's history, or in the history of the world. Our industrial resources and our industrial energies must all be mobilized for the support of this war. They are the factors vital to its success. We must see it through.

"My long sympathy with the efforts of the labor of this country to better conditions and to raise the standards of its life and conduct emboldens me to appeal to all those concerned with the shipbuilding work of the country to illustrate the worth of their American citizenship by rallying with loyal devotion, in these days of stress and danger, to the splendid appeal recently made by our President to the patriotism of organized labor. It is your country and it is my country, and it is your duty and it is my duty to defend its life and its liberty.

"The service to which you are called is essentially a military service. It is a call to the colors, as truly as if it were a call to stand in the battle line in defense of your country. Upon your service depends the transport and sustenance of the American army on the battlefields of France. Your American manhood will no more allow you to shirk the one service than the other. You will do your duty here, as they are doing their duty over there, and in loyal comradeship you will all be fighting the battles of democracy. That circumstances permit you to perform your share of this military service, free from the dangers of actual fighting and near the quiet of your own homes, is no imputation on your manhood or your courage.

"You are serving your country where it most needs your service and are performing your duty without thought of any advantage it may bring or sacrifice it may entail. You are fighting the enemies of your country with every rivet you drive, with every blow you strike, and you are showing to the world that free American democracy is capable of defending its liberties, not only with a splendid courage, but also with a splendid efficiency that will more than match the boasted efficiency of German despotism."

SHOWS THE SAFETY OF NATIONAL BANKS

Controller Reports a Steady Decline in Failures in Recent Years.

DUE TO CAREFUL SCRUTINY

Examination Methods Improved—Losses Down to 3-1000 of 1 Per Cent. of Deposits.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Controller of the Currency Williams tonight issued a statement in which he declared that there were fewer bank failures recently than in the past, by reason of the improved system of national bank examination and rigid provisions of recent laws. His statement follows:

"The national banks of the country are now eight times as safe as they were during the thirty-three years period prior to June 30, 1914, provided we accept as a criterion the reduced proportion of losses sustained by depositors of failed banks to total deposits of the national banks during the last three years as compared with the preceding thirty-three years.

"Records which have just been compiled show that for the thirty-three years from 1881 to 1914 the losses to depositors which arose from bank failures averaged annually during that period twenty-eight one-thousandths of 1 per cent. of the aggregate deposits of the national banks during those years. During the fiscal years ending June 30, 1915, 1916, and 1917, the percentage of losses of failed banks to total deposits of all banks has averaged only about three one-thousandths of 1 per cent., or less than one-eighth of what these losses averaged during the preceding thirty-three years.

"This great reduction in losses is largely the result of the improved system of national bank examination; of the greater thoroughness exercised in these examinations, and of the policy of requiring national banks to observe more rigidly the provisions of the law intended for their protection and the protection of their depositors and shareholders.

"The figures show that if the Government or an insurance company had been insuring deposits of all national banks from the years 1881 to 1914, it would have been necessary to charge the banks an annual premium of 28 cents per thousand, or $280 per million of deposits, to cover the actual losses, but during the past three years, under improved methods of examination, the losses from national bank failures have been so greatly reduced that the payment of less than 3½ cents per thousand, or less than $35 per million of deposits, would have been sufficient to insure the payment in full to all depositors of all the national banks which have failed during the past three fiscal years.

"These figures were developed as a result of a special investigation recently made by the Controller of the Currency into the subject of national bank failures in the United States for the past thirty-six years, or since July 1, 1881, which has just been completed. The investigation was not carried beyond 1881 because detailed figures for those earlier years are not available.

"The record shows that the total approximate loss to depositors for these thirty-six years on account of all national bank failures was $36,671,000, or 18.87 per cent. of the deposits of these failed banks. The average annual loss in the thirty-six years' period for the entire country was, therefore, $1,018,638.

"The largest loss to depositors reported for banks failing in any one year was for the year ending June 30, 1897, when the losses to depositors aggregated $3,815,608, and represented 152 one-thousandths of 1 per cent. of the aggregate deposits of all national banks at that time. The proportion of losses to the total deposits of all banks for that particular year was more than forty times as great as the average for the last three years.

"In 1897 the total deposits of all national banks amounted to $2,515,000,000 and the losses to depositors from failed banks amounted, as above stated, to $3,815,608. For the last year deposits amounted to $12,769,000,000, or over five times what they were in 1897, and yet the total losses to depositors of banks which failed in the year amounted to only about $369,000, or less than one-tenth of what the depositors' losses amounted to for banks failing in 1897.

"Of the 500 national banks which failed between 1881 and July, 1917, 36 were restored to solvency. Of the number that failed 11 were located in the Central Reserve cities, of which 1 was restored to solvency; 63 were located in the Reserve cities, of which 6 were restored, and 426 were country banks, of which 29 were reopened. From 1881 to July, 1917, there were 6 national bank failures in New York City, 4 in Chicago, and 1 in St. Louis. The failed banks in New York City returned to depositors 94.26 per cent. of their deposits. The St. Louis bank paid 96.60 per cent., and the Chicago bank paid an average of 100 per cent., with 1.58 per cent. of interest added.

"Among the fifty-four reserve cities there are twenty-four cities in which there have been no national bank failures since 1881. The reserve cities in which there were no bank failures for the period named are Albany, Washington, Richmond, Charleston, Atlanta, Savannah, Birmingham, Galveston, Houston, Waco, Chattanooga, Cleveland, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, St. Joseph, Omaha, Muskogee, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, and Ogden.

"The aggregate capital of all banks which failed from 1881 to 1917 was $77,533,000, and the aggregate of their deposits at the time of suspension was $194,361,000. The approximate average payment on deposits was 81.13 per cent., while the average percentage of losses of depositors to total deposits of all national banks each year for the period was twenty-three one-thousandths of 1 per cent."

SAFEGUARDS LABOR IN ALL WAR PLANTS

Army Issues Regulations as to Hours and Standards on Government Work.

BARS CHILDREN UNDER 14

Insists on Proper Conditions and Equal Pay for Women—Frowns on Overtime.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—The importance of throwing the most perfect safeguards around workers in arsenals and factories engaged in Government work is urged in a general order made public tonight and issued by the Chief of Ordnance to arsenal commanders and manufacturers.

The Chief of Ordnance impresses the point that the efficient operation of places where Government work is carried on demands that the workers not only be protected with the ordinary safeguards, but that their hours, wages and working conditions be satisfactorily adjusted.

A similar order has also been issued by the Quartermaster General. Its text follows:

SUGGESTIONS FOR ARSENAL COMMANDERS AND MANUFACTURERS.

While circumstances are not such as to render appropriate the issuance of definite orders upon this subject at the present time, the following suggestions are commended to the careful consideration of arsenal commanders and manufacturers executing orders for this department.

In view of the urgent necessity for a prompt increase in the volume of production of practically every article required for the conduct of the war, vigilance is demanded of all those in any way associated with industry, lest the safeguards with which the people of this country have sought to protect labor should be unwisely and unnecessarily broken down. It is a fair assumption that, for the most part, these safeguards are the mechanisms of efficiency. Industrial history proves that reasonable hours, fair working conditions, and a proper wage scale are essential to high production. During the war every attempt should be made to conserve in every possible way all of our achievements in the way of social betterment.

In the preparation of the following memorandum no effort has been made to establish, or even to suggest, definite rules of conduct.

The memorandum presents what may be considered a fair, if tentative, basis of action.

The department wishes to be assured that schedules of hours obviously excessive, or wage scales distinctly unfair, or working conditions such as should not be tolerated, will certain be brought to its attention.

1—HOURS OF LABOR.

1. Daily Hours—The day's work should not exceed the customary hours in the particular establishment or the standard already attained in the industry and in the community. It should certainly not be longer than ten hours for an adult workman. The drift in the industrial world is toward an eight-hour day as an efficiency measure. It has also been shown that hours of labor must be adapted to the age and sex of the worker and the nature of the occupation.

2. Overtime—The theory under which we pay "time and a half" for overtime is a tacit recognition that it is usually unnecessary and always undesirable to have overtime. The excess payment is a penalty and intended to act as a deterrent. There is no industrial abuse which needs closer watching in times of war.

3. Shifts in Continuous Industries—Eight hours per shift should be a maximum in continuous twenty-four-hour work.

4. Half Holiday on Saturday—The half holiday on Saturday is already a common custom in Summer, and it is advantageous throughout the year, especially if the work day be ten hours long the other days of the week. The working period on Saturday should not exceed five hours.

An occasional shift of two or three hours on Saturday afternoons is unobjectionable if essential, but the additional hours should be regarded as overtime and paid for on that basis.

5. Hours Posted—It is desirable that the hours of labor for every tour should be posted.

6. Holidays—The observance of national and local holidays will give opportunity for rest and relaxation which tend to make production more satisfactory.

7. One Day Off—One day of rest in seven should be a universal and invariable rule.

2.—STANDARDS OF WORKROOMS.

1. Protection Against Hazards and Provisions for Comfort and Sanitation.—Existing legal standards to prevent danger from fire, accident, occupational disease, or other hazards, and to provide good light, adequate ventilation, sufficient heat, and proper sanitation, should be observed as minimum requirements.

2. Location of Toilets.—All toilets should be sanitary and readily accessible.

3. Extreme Temperatures.—Those processes in which workers are exposed to excessive heat, that is, over 80 degrees; or excessive cold, that is, under 50 degrees, should be carefully supervised, so as to render the temperature conditions as nearly normal as possible. When extreme temperatures are essential workers should not only be properly clothed, but avoid sudden changes.

4. Lights.—If any light is at the level of the worker's eyes, it should be so shaded that its rays will not directly strike the eyes.

3.—WAGES.

1. Wage Standards.—Standards already established in the industry and in the locality should not be lowered. The minimum wage rates should be made in proper relation to the cost of living, and in fixing them it should be taken into consideration that the prices of necessities of life have shown great increases.

4.—NEGOTIATION BETWEEN EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYES.

The need of preserving and creating methods of joint negotiations between employers and groups of employes is especially great in the light of the critical points of controversy which may arise in a time like the present. Existing channels should be preserved and new ones opened, if required, to provide easier access for discussion between an employer and his employes over controversial points.

5. STANDARDS FOR EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN.

1. Hours of Labor.—Existing legal standards should be rigidly maintained, and even where the law permits a nine or ten hour day efforts should be made to restrict the work of women to eight hours.

2. Prohibition of Night Work.—The employment of women on night shifts should be prevented as a necessary protection, morally and physically.

3. Rest Periods.—No woman should be employed for a longer period than four and a half hours without a break for a meal, and a recess of ten minutes should be allowed in the middle of each working period.

4. Time for Meals.—At least thirty minutes should be allowed for a meal, and this time should be lengthened to forty-five minutes or an hour if the working day exceeds eight hours.

5. Place for Meals.—Meals should not be eaten in the workroom.

6. Saturday Half-Holiday.—The Saturday half-holiday should be considered an absolute essential for women under all conditions.

7. Seats.—For women who sit at their work seats with backs should be provided, unless the occupation renders this impossible. For women who stand at work seats should be available, and their use permitted at regular intervals.

8. Lifting Weights.—No woman should be required to lift repeatedly more than twenty-five pounds in any single load.

9. Replacement of Men by Women.—When it is necessary to employ women in work hitherto done by men care should be taken to make sure that the task is adapted to the strength of women. The standards of wages hitherto prevailing for men in the process should not be lowered where women render equivalent service. The hours for women engaged in such processes, of course, should not be longer than those formerly worked by men.

10. Tenement House Work.—No work shall be given out to be done in rooms used for living purposes or in rooms directly connected with living rooms in any dwelling or tenement.

6. STANDARDS FOR EMPLOYMENT OF MINORS.

1. Age.—No child under 14 years of age shall be employed at any work under any conditions.

2. Hours of Labor.—No child between the ages of 14 and 16 years shall be employed more than eight hours a day or forty-eight hours a week, and night work is prohibited.

FOR THE 8-HOUR DAY.

Federation Asked to Urge Extending It Beyond Wilson's Order.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 18.—There was no session of the American Federation of Labor Convention today. Many of the prominent officers in the organization spoke from pulpits and forums, and the Socialist delegates were invited by the local Socialist organization to attend a mass meeting.

President Samuel Gompers, it was announced today, has been invited to visit England at the close of the present convention. The invitation was brought by John L. Hill and Arthur Hayday, fraternal delegates from the British Trades Union Congress, and came from the Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress. Mr. Gompers has not indicated whether he will accept.

Delegate Hill, it was also announced, will visit some of the most important centres of this country to place before workers in the United States first-hand information as to the lessons learned by British trade unionists working in close touch with their Government on work connected with the war. Before leaving Great Britain Mr. Hill conferred with the Ministeries of Munitions and Labor and prepared much data which he believes will be of much use to America.

The extent of the application of the eight-hour day to Government contracts, federation leaders here realize, holds the possibility of precipitating one of the liveliest fights of the convention when it reconvenes this week. The ruling of certain Government departments that President Wilson's proclamation of March 4, 1917, applies only to contractors engaged directly on Government work has resulted in the introduction of two resolutions which seek to have the federation go on record as favoring the same principle for all firms and corporations supplying manufactured materials to Government contractors.

AGAINST WAR TIME WEALTH.

Jacob H. Schiff Says No Man Should Seek to Increase Fortune.

To the captains of the forces who are to lead the campaign in this city to collect $5,000,000 for Jewish War Relief and for the Jewish Board of Welfare Work in the Army and Navy, Jacob H. Schiff declared yesterday:

"No man should seek to increase his personal fortune for the period of the war. The duty of every American at this time is to devote his whole thought and effort to the needs of the Government and to the needs of those who have been made to suffer through the war. It is, in my opinion, distinctly unpatriotic for those who have what they require to seek at such a time as this to amass additional wealth when thousands of young men are offering their lives in sacrifice for the ideals of America and when other thousands, many old men, women, and little children, are dying of starvation."

The meeting held yesterday at the home of Mr. Schiff, 965 Fifth Avenue, was for the purpose of discussing plans for the campaign for war relief which is to be held between Dec. 3 and 15. It is proposed during these two weeks to reach every one of the 1,500,000 Jews in New York City in the effort to complete the $10,000,000 needed by the Welfare Board for its work among the 50,000 Jewish soldiers in active service. The captains who were assembled for the first time comprised Mortimer Schiff, Louis Marshall, Henry Morgenthau, Abram I. Elkus, Sam A. Lewisohn, Jacob Unterberg, Leopold Stern, Simon F. Rothschild, Bernard Semel, J. H. Semel, E. S. Rothschild, Judge Otto A. Rosalsky, Leopold Plaut, H. B. Rosen, Sol G. Rosenbaum, Louis J. Robertson, Jacob Rossbach, Dudley D. Sicher, Leo Sulzberger, Henry M. Tech, Arthur D. Wolf, Sigmund Eisner, Saul F. Dribben, Walter Emmerich, Herbert S. Martin, Sam Kridel, and David A. Brown of Detroit, who has volunteered his services to conduct the campaign.

SLACKER'S RUSE A FAILURE.

He Picked Up Papers, but Showed His Mind Was All Right.

The method adopted by one man to get out of the national army is told by an army officer from one of the cantonments near New York.

"In a recent batch of recruits," he said, "there was one man who acted so peculiarly from the moment he arrived that several of the privates called my attention to him. This man would pick up every piece of paper he saw, scrutinize it carefully and then say in the most mournful tones: 'That ain't it.' All day long, in the barracks and out of doors, he would keep up this performance. It got on the nerves of some of the men, and they told me about it. After watching the man for a couple of days I sent him to the base hospital for observation. Here he completely fooled the doctors.

"At the end of the second week, after the man had picked up and examined every piece of paper he could find, each time uttering his refrain, 'That ain't it,' the doctors recommended that he be returned to civil life as mentally deranged. Accordingly the proper papers were made out and the Mustering Officer summoned the man to his office. As soon as the slacker received his honorable discharge, he examined it and then said, 'That's it.'"

The officer added that not many minutes elapsed before the man was back again with his company and started on two weeks kitchen duty.

RECRUIT FIREMEN FOR WAR.

Drive for 7,000 Men Nearing a Successful Conclusion.

With the aid of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense, the naval recruiting office here, in charge of Commander Adams, is rounding up its quota of the 7,000 men needed acutely in the stokeholds of fighting ships and transports. The subway bandsmen and the musicians of the battleship "Recruit" in Union Square are manning recruiting buses, and the eloquence of young officers is winning many men to feed a fire for Uncle Sam.

The recruiting officials believe their campaign will yield the necessary number of men by the end of this week. The naval recruiting officials point out that if a fireman's life does not appeal, there is plenty of room elsewhere, as the navy needs cooks, messmen, bakers, underseamen, coppersmiths, hospital apprentices, electricians, radio operators, enginemen, molders, patternmakers, blacksmiths, and machinists.

WAR BOARDS WEIGH BUILDING STATUS

Construction Interests Not Disturbed by Attention to New York Problems.

INTERMITTENT DELAYS ONLY

Most Building Materials Are in Storage and Can Be Shipped Here by Water.

Building construction interests in this market were not disturbed by the fact that Washington War Boards were weighing the status of building construction and material requirements in the light of war necessity, according to The Dow Service Daily Building Reports today.

Fuel and other administrators now know that the building industry is very closely allied with the plans now under way for speedily winning the war, floating future Liberty Loans and otherwise helping the various departments in getting the highest degree of efficiency in every field of war-time activity.

In this district especially, the lack of adequate building space with which to carry on the administrative departments of great companies engaged in supplying war materials, the necessity for speedily building docks, warehouses, and homes and tenements for factory workers being brought here by the thousands to work in the new plants now being rushed to completion and the constant letting of other contracts for additional Government buildings, all of which create in themselves demand for other types of building in their proximity; all combined to convince the authorities of the absolute necessity of giving building construction and material manufacturers free rein in keeping their organizations together so as to be ready for any emergency demand for building accommodation that may arise, especially since this district is now so very seriously under constructed.

Most building materials are manufactured and placed in store for future requirements. This applies to practically 95 per cent. of materials going into construction. Therefore even should an embargo be placed on certain commodities there is no reason to believe that building construction will be checked.

Common brick is available in ample quantities. It is selling today at a lower price than it has since this country went to war, $8 to $8.25, with manufacturers not over anxious to sell. Approximately 20,000,000 less brick came into this market so far than was reported in the same period last year, and up the river there is a quantity of brick wholly adequate to take care of the requirements of this city and vicinity.

But the opening of a shipyard in the Newburg district, the heart of the brick manufacturing centre, is expected to have a serious bearing on the amount of brick that will be produced next year, with the result that brick makers are inclined not to push the market with their good brick. The brick selling at $7.75 and $8 are clearance brick.

Portland cement manufacturers have moderate stocks on hand. Shipments from all mills combined were slightly more favorable for October than for September. Shipments for ten months were only one per cent. under the corresponding period last year.

Shipments for October were not quite equal to those of September, but were greater than those for June, July and August, while the cement and clinker stock combined is over half a million barrels less than a month ago in the Eastern market. The growing availability of concrete as a substitute for steel and its probable use in making concrete ships will probably occasion higher demands upon the manufacturers of this product next Spring than was earlier anticipated. Stocks right now in the Lehigh Valley district are only 2 per cent. greater than they were a year ago.

Sharp reductions are reported in the current lists on angles, tees and tank plates ranging from a quarter of a cent a pound on the two former and two cents on the latter. The National Tube Company's new discount card on tubular products, showing advances over former prices of $8 per ton to the Government price on black and galvanized steel pipe, oil country goods, line pipe and all other tubular products, has not yet affected the New York base, the discounts prevailing here unchanged. Any change in the Pittsburgh base takes some time to become effective in this market because old stocks must be worked off first to place the new list in operation here.

The building trade is beginning to feel the increasing amount of old work coming out for figures reported some time ago as having been revived fur plans in architects' offices.

Current quotations show a slight reaction in common brick from $8.25 flat to $8.00 for fair grade of brick. Portland cement still rules at $2.12 a barrel in 1,000-barrel lots at dock, New York, but is in a seasonal market; roofing slate is reflecting the higher manufacturing costs and is expected to show important changes in the near future.

The whole trend of the building material market is in favor of building activity during the winter because of the extreme likelihood of general shifting of labor next Spring when the building season gets under way. Architects are urging their clients to proceed with building operations now, especially with tenement house operations, small dwellings, and building alterations.

STOKES GEMS LISTED.

Police and Pawnbrokers Asked to Find $30,000 Stolen Property.

A list of the jewels stolen on Oct. 31 from Mrs. W. E. D. Stokes, wife of the proprietor of the Hotel Ansonia, was sent to pawnbrokers here on Saturday and to the police of large cities for similar distribution. The jewels were in a box in a suitcase that had been placed with other baggage in the owner's stateroom on a West Shore train, on which she was returning from Chicago. Mr. Stokes said last night that no clue to the lost property had been obtained, although the police and many private detectives throughout the country had been searching for fifteen days. Mrs. Stokes declined to give the value of the jewelry, but it is estimated at more than $30,000.

Twenty-nine pieces of jewelry and $110 in bond coupons were taken by the thief. The larger pieces consisted of a diamond necklace, a neck chain of diamonds, about one-quarter carat each; a pair of diamond bracelets, which may be worn as a necklace; a bar pin of fifteen diamonds, one of four pear-shaped rubies and a number of diamonds; a bracelet of two sapphires and two diamonds, one pearl, and three diamond pins, six rings, several of them heirlooms; a gold watch initialed "H. E.," and engraved inside "Helen Ellwood, 1908," and a gold meshbag set with diamonds and sapphires and initialed "H. E. S."

It is believed the thief opened the suitcase with a key and took the jewel box, as the lock of the suitcase was unbroken. A pawnbroker said it was doubtful if a thief would attempt to pawn so valuable a collection of jewels, but would dispose of them to a "fence" or receiver of stolen goods.

CALLS AUNT A SUICIDE.

Soldier Nephew of Mrs. Stiassny Testifies at Inquiry.

Assistant District Attorney John T. Dooling continued his investigation yesterday into the death of Mrs. Sarah Stiassny. One witness was examined by Mr. Dooling. He was Albert Holzman, a nephew of Mrs. Stiassny, who came up from Camp Upton. Mr. Holzman said that he saw his aunt on the Sunday prior to her death and that she then appeared to be in good health. He also said that he had loaned Richard Epstein, chief beneficiary under the will of Mrs. Stiassny, $200 some time prior to the death of his aunt. Mr. Epstein had repaid him, he said. Mr. Holzman said he was firmly convinced his aunt had committed suicide.

TEUTON WOMEN HERE MAY BE REGISTERED

New Enemy Regulation Soon to be Promulgated Will Affect 140,000 Germans.

PIERS UNDER MARTIAL LAW

Aliens Who Violate the Waterfront Order Will Be Interned for the Period of the War.

The new enemy alien regulations, which are expected to be promulgated by President Wilson today, and which it is understood will immediately become effective, will practically mean that the entire waterfront of New York City and of the Jersey ports will be placed under martial law. The forecast of the nature of these regulations, the most stringent adopted since America went to war, published in yesterday's TIMES, discloses that all enemy aliens in New York City will shortly be called upon to present themselves for registration, and that after they have been registered they will be required to report at stated intervals to the authorities, probably to the police commanders of the precincts in which they live.

It is believed that the number of Germans who will have to register under the provisions of the regulations about to be issued by the President will be between 120,000 and 140,000, the great majority of them residents or doing business in what is known as the Metropolitan District of New York. The number given includes women as well as men. It is understood that women enemies as well as men will have to register under the new regulations.

The regulations, which will cover the guarding of docks and piers at which vessels of 500 tons or over dock, means that practically every pier in New York waters will be guarded by soldiers. It was said yesterday that, in the entire City of New York, there are not half a dozen docks where the vessels anchored do not average more than 500 tons' displacement.

At the present time it is estimated that probably 10,000 Germans do business or live within two blocks of the waterfront. All of these persons, according to the forecast of the regulations, will be ordered to move to parts of the city not included in the waterfront zones. As soon as the new regulations go into effect Germans will be warned to keep away from the waterfront, and the entrance of any enemy alien into the zone will mean the immediate internment for the rest of the war of the offender.

It is not known whether the regular army or the State Guard will be placed in charge of the waterfronts. The Army and Navy Journal of Saturday suggests that this duty might be turned over to the Naval Militia, a force which has probably more experience than any other armed organization in the country in such work.

DENIES BOY'S ATTACK WAS READ IN CLASS

Schmalhausen, Accused High School Teacher, Takes Issue with President Willcox.

Samuel Schmalhausen, one of three De Witt Clinton High School teachers to be tried tomorrow at the Board of Education for "holding views subversive of good discipline," in whose class, according to President Willcox of the board, a composition was read attacking President Wilson, yesterday issued a long statement denying that the composition referred to had been read in class, and asserting that it was not until two weeks later, when examined by Dr. John L. Tildsley, Associate Superintendent of Schools, that he knew of the contents of the letter.

Mr. Willcox was reported as saying that the letter, written by Hyman Herman, a pupil, 14 years old, was read in the class on Oct. 22. Mr. Schmalhausen, in his statement, asserts that the Herman boy's letter was not read in class, but that four other letters on the same subject were read, and that after the session was over a superior officer, Miss Ellen E. Garrigues, head of the English Department of the school, gathered all the compositions together and took them with her. The teacher also adds that the same topic was assigned to his second class, and he believes that "an examination of the vast majority of the seventy-five papers submitted by the two classes will reveal an overwhelmingly prevailing sentiment in favor of President Wilson and his pro-war policies."

"The first opportunity I was given to read and correct the paper in question was on Friday, Nov. 2, two weeks after it had been written," the statement continued. "Dr. Tildsley confronting me with the paper, said: 'How would you correct it? What would be your remarks if the boy had read the paper in class?' I asked for time to correct it, and did so. Dr. Tildsley has in his possession the paper with all the corrections I inserted. He read my criticisms, one by one, slowly and carefully, and appeared to be impressed with the fairmindedness of my reaction.

"In my corrections I took especial pains to check the boy up whenever a loose or exaggerated or untrue or irrational assertion appeared."

Some of his marginal comments, Mr. Schmalhausen said, were: "Coming from an intelligent boy, this certainly sounds like an insane remark." "Untrue." "Where did you get this notion?" "Biased," and "Exaggerated."

"Doesn't it strike the fairminded public as extremely strange," Mr. Schmalhausen said in his statement, "that of seventy-five papers, one of which was never read in my class, and which, therefore, could not be submitted to proper criticism in classroom, is the only paper that is trumped up to my discredit? Doesn't it look like a frame-up?"

When questioned by Dr. Francis J. Paul, the Principal of the school, as to what he meant by inserting the word "frankly" in giving his students the following direction: "Write an open letter to Woodrow Wilson, commenting frankly upon his conduct of the war against the German Government," Mr. Schmalhausen said he replied he meant "honestly."

In his statement the teacher said:

"The second student called was a young Jewish boy, who read a critical letter expressing disapproval of the President's policy of emphasizing democracy for the world without placing sufficient emphasis upon more democracy in America. He went on to point out that the suppression of several radical newspapers, which in his opinion the President could have prevented, was not a convincing evidence of the President's desire to make democracy safe in America.

"After the completion of the letter general discussion was called for. A young fellow named Brandenberg jumped up and said, addressing the reader face to face, 'You're all wrong about that remark of yours; you say that America has political democracy and no industrial democracy, and that Germany has industrial democracy but no political democracy. Germany has more political democracy than America.' To which the reader replied very sharply, 'No, you yourself are mistaken. Germany has no political democracy.'

"Brandenberg was about to speak again when the head of the department berated the offending student. She said, 'Young man, go back to Germany. You don't belong here.' Brandenberg retorted, 'Miss Garrigues, you are mistaken. I am an American. I have been trained in the American schools. I was born in America. My father was—' At this point Miss Garrigues declared, 'Sit down, sit down. Those are improper utterances. I won't listen to you.' The boy sat down. I waited quietly for a moment until the excitement should subside.

"I called upon a third student to read his letter. After he had read a paragraph the head of department interrupted him and said, 'That's enough. I don't wish to listen to any more. Give me your paper.' The boy did as he was told."

The three suspended teachers and the six who were transferred are expected to speak at a meeting being arranged for Wednesday night by a group of parents' organizations, interested in the public schools. The meeting will be held in Terrace Garden, 145 East Fifty-eighth Street.

INQUIRY FOR NITRATE FIRE

Marshal Brophy Believes Carelessness May Have Caused Blaze.

Fire Marshal Brophy will press today an inquiry into the circumstances of the fire which early on Sunday morning destroyed the plant of the Knowles-Bradley Company, manufacturers of saltpeter at 98-104 Van Dyke Street, Brooklyn. He will have the assistance of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice and the Secret Service. Officials who examined the plant yesterday after $100,000 damage had been done, said it would have been an easy matter for some one to have dropped oil-soaked rags into the tanks of nitrate with quick destructive results.

The company had been making nitrate for plants supplying the Allies with powder, and, according to one of its officers, was about to sign contracts with the American Government which would have doubled its output. The plant had no German or Austrian employes, it was said last night. The watchman, John Levson, a Finn, who has applied for naturalization, reported no suspicious circumstances, so far as the authorities divulged. According to the Fire Marshal, evidence was found that the fire might have been caused by a careless workman who put down his lighted pipe in the plant.

WOULD TAX ENEMY ALIENS.

Collector Eisner Wants Higher Rate for Them Than for Citizens.

Should a suggestion made by Mark Eisner, Collector of Internal Revenue in the Third District of this city, to Commissioner Daniel C. Roper meet with the approval of the Treasury Department, enemy aliens in this country may be called upon to pay higher income taxes than those provided for native Americans. Collector Eisner said yesterday that in view of the fact that in many instances enemy aliens were filling the places at remunerative wages of American citizens who had relinquished their jobs to enter the nation's military forces, it seemed only right that such aliens should stand an extra tax.

Seize German on Waterfront.

Rudolph C. Reumann, an unnaturalized German, who said he lived in Waterbury, Conn., was arrested by an agent of the Naval Intelligence Bureau last night on the North River waterfront and locked up in the Greenwich street Station. The waterfront of Manhattan is forbidden territory for enemy aliens under the President's proclamation, and as Reumann had no permit he was charged with violation of the zone law. He probably will be interned on Ellis Island.

Jordan Now for War Program.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 18.—David Starr Jordon, Chancellor of Leland Stanford, Jr., University and for some time a leader in the peace movement in this country, declared in a sermon delivered at the Boyleston Avenue Unitarian Church here today that it was plainly America's duty to go "full speed ahead" with the present war program.

FOOD AGENCIES SEEK BASIS OF HARMONY

Hoover Sends Representative Here to Reach Agreement with State and City.

MITCHELL DENIES CLASH

Administrator Williams Says City Is Saving 5,000 Barrels of Flour a Week.

The report that John Mitchell, head of the State Food Commission, intended to resign unless there was less talk and more action among the various food administrators at work here probably will have the effect of leading Herbert C. Hoover, the National Food Administrator, to take steps without delay to establish a definite basis upon which city, State and national organizations can work in co-ordination. The first step probably will be taken today upon the arrival here of F. C. Walcott, Mr. Hoover's representative. Both Mr. Mitchell and Arthur Williams, the City Food Administrator, said yesterday that there was no friction of city, State, and Federal authorities. Mr. Mitchell, however, urged the need of action. His previous remarks, he said, had been misinterpreted. He had not sought to convey any threat of resignation, nor had he intended what he had said to be taken as serving an ultimatum on the Federal Government.

"It is true," Mr. Mitchell said, "that we have been trying to effect a working agreement with Washington, whereby the various food commissions of New York may work in harmony, but nothing which I have said should be construed as an ultimatum or as a threat to resign. The remarks I made to one of my men have been misinterpreted. I did say that unless we could find a definite basis of action I did not see how or when the State Food Commission could carry out the work for which it was intended. I do not wish it to be understood that there has been any clash. Negotiations with Mr. Walcott have been friendly. We are trying to discover some means more effective than we have at present for prosecuting our work."

Arthur Williams also said that there was no friction between his office and the State Food Commission and the City Commissioner of Markets. Each organization had a great work to do, he said, and they would do it in harmony and efficiently with the public good in mind.

Administrator Williams, who believes that food prices are going down, summed up yesterday some of the benefits that have come to consumers of this city through the efforts of the National Food Administrator.

"Through the loyal efforts of housewives, the hotel and restaurant men and through the establishment of wheatless and meatless days," Mr. Williams said, "there has been in the last two months a saving of 20 per cent. of flour that would normally have been consumed here. The minimum consumption of flour here is 25,000 barrels a week. This means a saving of 5,000 barrels a week, or 40,000 barrels in eight weeks and this amount has been released for shipment to the Allies. As this amount of flour would have been brought here under normal conditions it means also a great saving in transportation and cars that would ordinarily have been in use to bring the shipments to the market were released for other hauling. In two months about 15 per cent. of the usual meat supply has been saved. If war bread is a success there may be an additional 20 per cent. of wheat saved.

"Dealing in rough figures, I should say that the minimum meat consumption here is about 800,000 pounds a week. The saving in this line has been about 120,000 pounds a week—almost 1,000,000 pounds in eight weeks. As an illustration of what meatless day means, I am told that on the first meatless day the Waldorf-Astoria saved two and a half tons of meat. The hotels have cut out suckling pig, lamb, and baby turkeys, and the Waldorf has reduced the ready-cooked vegetables from forty to fifteen varieties.

"Public opinion is responsible for much of the success of our efforts. A broker told me that in two years he had made $400,000 by reselling contracts within an organization of which he is a member. This was once considered good business, and that man was hailed as being smart. Now, if this course of action were pursued, that man would be held up as an enemy to his country.

Addressing a meeting of the National Hotel and Restaurant Committee held at the Biltmore on Saturday, B. S. Allen, representing the National Food Administrator, said that Mr. Hoover would not place the hotels and restaurants under Federal license.

"Misinformed persons are trying to obtain the adoption of a two-course luncheon and a three-course dinner," Mr. Allen said. "This is a great mistake, for instead of accomplishing a saving, it will increase the consumption of wheat and meat. This idea was tried out in Belgium, and to the surprise of many it was found it increased the consumption of these foodstuffs 30 per cent. Cutting down the number of courses is false economy. The Administration is not asking people to eat less, but only to save those things that are most needed for our allies and our soldiers."

In the discussion of plans Thomas D. Green, President of the Hotel and Restaurant Association of New York City, and Edward M. Tierney, proprietor of the Hotel Arlington of Binghamton, protested against the action of Governor Whitman in advising that large public dinners be discontinued during the war.

F. A. Purcell, Acting Director of the Central Purchase Committee, in a report which he has just made to Henry Moskowitz, City Commissioner of Markets, on the coal situation here, recommends that the city establish close co-operation with the Fuel Administration, encourage dealers to distribute coal in bag lots, and that in districts where the coal yards are not well distributed, the city establish such yards. Mr. Purcell's report was sent yesterday to the Fuel Administration in New York.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—The Food Administration will complete within a few days a plan for co-ordination of the work of New York State, City and Federal Food Administrations. At the same time it will name a State Federal Administrator to supervise the work in the State outside of New York City, which now has a Federal Administrator.

CHILDREN'S VACATION FUND.

$10,000 in Liberty Bonds Contributed Toward $250,000 Needed.

Announcement was made yesterday that a member of the board of the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, influenced by Secretary of War Baker's statement that "we cannot afford when losing boys in France to lose children at home," has given $10,000 in Liberty bonds to a special fund of this association. This fund for children's vacations is to be $250,000, and the gift in hand is on condition that $25,000 be obtained by New Year's Day.

Superintendents of schools from many cities in the United States and Canada will attend a conference in the Bible House tomorrow. During the eleven years of the work 422,085 children have been taken off hot streets in Summer and taught Bible lessons, games, and handicraft at an expense of $390,672, or considerably less than $1 per child. Last year schools were held in 402 centres in 98 cities, and 63,541 children were cared for.

HUMISTON CHARGES 'FALSE.'

Democratic League Committee Declares Them Without Foundation.

The Law Committee of the Young Men's Democratic League of New York held a special meeting at their headquarters, 1,368 Broadway, yesterday, at the request of members now in the national army at Camp Upton. The committee later issued a statement in part as follows:

"After a careful investigation conducted by the Law Committee, the recent charges made by Mrs. Grace Humiston regarding the morals of the young men at the various army encampments were proven false, contemptible, and malicious. The investigation by the committee discloses the magnificent work in looking after the meral welfare and temporal comfort of our men being conducted by the Jewish societies, the Y. M. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus at the national army encampments.

"A resolution was adopted by the Law Committee praising the vigorous attitude taken by Major Gen. J. Franklin Bell in defending the character of the men at Camp Upton and the attitude of the men in the American Army toward our womanhood."

Hudson Offers a New Type Super-Six
The Touring Limousine
WE have just received the newest Hudson Super-Six. It combines all the advantages of the Limousine and the Sedan. By raising the glass partition the driver is separated from the passenger compartment. With the partition lowered the car is a luxurious Sedan which can be driven by the owner with the same comfort that he would drive a car built especially for the gentleman driver.
With this car the chauffeur can be used with the same seclusion for the passenger as in the finest Limousine. A dictaphone establishes communication between the passenger and the driver when the car is used as a Limousine. The rear compartment is heated through the medium of a radiator in the floor. Every detail that practical experience has shown adds to comfort in the closed car is embodied in this new Super-Six.
The windows can all be lowered and the car becomes an airy, delightful, open model. With the windows closed and the radiator in use, it becomes as comfortable as a drawing-room.
Provision is made for carrying luggage on the roof when the car is used for touring. It is a light, lively car, equaling in sturdiness and sprightliness the performance of a powerful open car. We know of no model that so fittingly meets the wants of those who require a car suitable for all-year service and which at will gives the seclusion of the Limousine or the intimacy of the Sedan.
Being a new model in every particular, the production will necessarily be limited for some time. We urge an early inspection and decision to assure early delivery.

TRANSPORT AFIRE AT HOBOKEN PIER AFTER ARMY RAID

Troopship Pastores Bursts Into Flame Following Arrest of Enemy Aliens.

JUST BACK FROM FRANCE

And Some of the 200 Arrested in the Raid Had Been Detained on Board.

MUNITIONS STORED ON PIER

Quick Work Saves Them—Unexpected Sequel to Biggest Roundup of Germans Yet Attempted.

Just after United States Army soldiers had completed the transfer early this morning of 200 alien enemies to Ellis Island after they had been seized in a raid on River Street, Hoboken, in compliance with the President's proclamation, fire started between decks on the United States Army transport Pastores, tied up at Army Dock No. 1, River Street, Hoboken, on which some of the Germans had been held during the round up shortly before.

The fire was discovered at 12:15 o'clock. The crew was at once aroused and an alarm was sent in to the Hoboken Fire Headquarters from a box on the land end of the pier, which used to be North German Lloyd Pier No. 1. Two other alarms were sent in, bringing out all the Hoboken fire apparatus. Another alarm sent to Manhattan brought two New York City fireboats. The entire 2d Battalion, Forty-ninth United States Infantry, was called out and put on guard, barring approach to the piers from all directions, except to the firemen.

Firemen said that the fire was between decks and at 1:30 o'clock had not reached the holds of the ship, although they feared it would because of the difficulty of getting at it. Fire engines were run out on the pier and used water from the river, while the fire boats poured streams of water against the heated steel sides of the transport.

At 2:30 o'clock it was said the fire had been extinguished. No estimate of the [illegible]

It was said early this morning that there would be a thorough investigation of the fire. Hoboken firemen reported that when they got to the pier the fire had acquird considerable headway, although they reached the ship a few minutes after the alarm had been turned in, the Hoboken Fire Department headquarters being only a few blocks away. According to the firemen, considerable damage was done to the ship and whatever was aboard her, not only from the blaze itself, but from the tons of water pumped into her.

A soldier among those on guard at the piers said that the ship was being fumigated when the blaze was discovered.

The Pastores arrived in New York recently, after a trip to France. She is lying at a pier on which there are stored millions of dollars' worth of munitions and an hour after she caught fire the firemen were discussing whether she should be cut loose from the pier and allowed to float down stream. The pier where she is burning is of concrete construction.

The Pastores is a twin-screw steel steamship of 7,781 gross tonnage, built at Belfast in 1912, for the passenger and fruit trade between New York and the West Indies. She is owned by the United Fruit Company and was transferred from British to American registry in 1915.

SOLDIERS ARREST 200 IN RAID IN HOBOKEN

Hunt Out Enemy Aliens in a Thorough Search of River Street Resorts.

Within twelve hours after the publication of the President's proclamation that alien enemies must not be found within 100 yards of docks, piers, and waterfronts, United States soldiers, fully armed, last night raided River Street, Hoboken, where it runs along the army piers, and seized more than 200 men suspected of being enemy aliens. A few of them were released, but most of them were taken on boats at once to Ellis Island.

The work was done quietly and effectively. The Hoboken police knew nothing of the roundup until more than an hour after it was over, when friends or relatives of the seized men importuned the police for information as to what had become of those the soldiers took in charge.

The detachment of about fifty soldiers landed at one of the Government piers about 8 o'clock. They separated in sections of four, and with rifles on shoulders started to search the street. The soldiers went into stores, rooming houses, and stopped men on the street, but the greater number of those seized were found in saloons. These were the saloons which the War Department had ordered closed. Instead of closing the proprietors had continued business, forsaking the sale of intoxicants, but doing a thriving trade in "near beer."

The soldiers asked every man whether or not he was a citizen. Those who satisfied the soldiers that they were citizens were permitted to go. All others were marched to one of the larger piers, where those who said they were citizens were told to send for relatives or friends who could produce citizenship papers or other proofs that the men in custody were not alien enemies. Those who could not give proof or who did not claim to be citizens were hurried away to Ellis Island.

Many of the men seized were violating the old zone regulation under which

One American Is Killed In Fight with German Patrol

By The Associated Press.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Nov. 19.—There has been another clash between American and German patrols in No Man's Land.

Full details are not known at this hour, beyond the fact that one American soldier was killed.

American patrols have been especially active the last two nights. One encountered a German patrol close to the German lines. The firing at this point was hot but brief. There are believed to have been German casualties, but they cannot be determined.

Artillery firing on the sector continues more active.

HINT THAT POPE MAY LEAVE ITALY

Vatican Circles Discuss His Going to Spain to Push His Peace Propaganda.

HAMPERED WHILE IN ROME

Theory Is That He Could Combat War More Effectively from Neutral Territory.

ROME, Nov. 19.—The question is being asked in various quarters here, especially in Vatican circles, if Pope Benedict intends to leave Rome and Italy. If the Pontiff should decide upon this step it would be due to the difficulty of assuming the attitude he desires to take with regard to the war so long as he resides in a belligerent country, in spite of all the efforts made by the Italian Government to guarantee his complete liberty and independence.

It is asserted that pourparlers have taken place with regard to the Pope's going to Spain as a guest of King Alfonso.

In the conclave which elected Leo XIII, all the Cardinals except eight—including the late Cardinal Hohenlohe, a brother of the late German Chancellor, [illegible] then Rome and the Papacy [illegible] indissoluble.

It was Pope Pius IX. who called himself "the prisoner of the Vatican." He and his predecessors had ruled for centuries over a territory stretching across Italy from sea to sea. This temporal power of the Pope was diminished at various times, principally by plebiscitum. He thus lost to the new kingdom of Italy Romagna, Umbria, and the Marches in 1860, and the residue, including Rome itself, in 1870, when his French protectors marched away to the Franco-Prussian War, and the troops of Victor Emmanuel II. entered the Eternal City.

Pius IX. regarded the Italian Government as a usurper of his temporal power and declined to treat with it. The latter, therefore, acted alone and on May 13, 1871, passed the famous Law of Guarantees, which secured to his Holiness and his successors forever the possession of the Vatican and Lateran palaces and the villa of Castel Gandolfo, together with an income of 3,225,000 lire.

Pius IX. shut himself up in the Vatican, used the Lateran palace and villa for his court, but declined to touch the money. His successors have observed his policy.

It has always been asserted by the legal authorities of the Italian Government that the Popes were tenants and not owners of the Vatican, and that the Law of Guarantees was not a contract, but a privilege granted by the Government, which the Pope had declined to accept.

This view seems borne out by the attitude of the Government at the time of the Conclave which elected Pope Leo XIII. in 1878. The assembled Cardinals, fearing some untoward demonstration on the part of the Roman mob, which had been particularly bitter against Pius IX. and his Secretary of State, Cardinal Antonnelli, asked the Government for safe conduct to Civitavecchia, the ancient port of Rome, with the intention of holding the Conclave there.

Crispi was then Minister of the Interior, and he replied for the Government:

"Their Eminences may go where they please and be sure of adequate protection; but no Pope [elected elsewhere] may enter the Vatican."

Several times there have been rumors that the Vatican and Quirinal were on the point of settling the matter in a way that would at least allow the Pope to travel, but the official press of successive Ministries has declared that the Government could not undertake the responsibility of protecting his Holiness outside the territory guaranteed him by the law of 1871.

Pope Pius X., however, opened the way for negotiations soon after his election in June, 1903, by declaring that the temporal power of the Popes was not a matter of dogma, but of dogmatic doctrine, and that a Pope, like any other sovereign, might extend or contract his domain at will or by treaty with other sovereigns.

The Quirinal, however, paid no attention to the implied invitation to acquire a Papal title to the territory whose people had voted adhesion to the Kingdom of Italy.

The Papal possessions of Avignon where Popes were elected and held their Court in the fourteenth century, and of the Comtat-Venaissin, are said to offer a precedent for Italy's action in that they were annexed to France in 1791.

ITALIANS ATTACK ON ASIAGO FRONT; HOLD ON PIAVE

Vigilant Defense on the Lower River Prevents Any New Attempts at Crossing.

QUERO AND TOMBA FALL

Invaders' Strong Northern Offensive Results in the Capture of 1,100 Italians.

FOE SLAUGHTERED IN RIVER

1,500 Austrian Dead Line Banks Near Zenson; an Equal Number Captured.

ROME, Nov. 19.—Italian forces have begun an offensive on the Asiago Plateau and have occupied advanced elements of trenches, the War Office announced today.

Further attempts of the Austro-German troops to cross the Piave have been stopped.

On the front west of the Piave, south of Quero, great numbers of Austro-German troops are attacking the Monte Monfenera [Fener?] and Monte Tomba lines.

The text of the official statement follows:

Last night there was lively artillery activity between Lago di Garda and the Astico.

On the Asiago Plateau the enemy made violent concentrations of fire on our positions at Monte Tondarecar and Monte Badenecche without following up with any infantry attack. Our parties in new offensive operations reoccupied advanced elements of trenches, capturing six officers and 202 men.

South of Quero enemy forces in great number are attacking our Monte Monfenera and Monte Tomba lines.

On the plains the vigilance of our troops has stopped the enemy from renewing any attempt whatsoever to cross the Piave.

Among our troops the following deserve again to be specially mentioned for valor shown during these last days: Bersaglieri battalions in the [illegible] of a strong wind, by our airships at the basin of Primolano, to the northwest of Susegana and at Tezze di Livenza.

Berlin Says Quero Has Fallen.

BERLIN, Nov. 19, (via London.)—Quero and Monte Cornelle, on the northern Italian front, have been taken by storm, and the Italians have been driven from Monte Tomba, the War Office announced this afternoon. The capture of 1,100 Italians in this district is also reported.

The text of the announcement follows:

Northeast of Asiago the enemy repeated his fruitless and costly attacks to gain the lost heights; between the Brenta and the Piave the last few days have brought the (Teutonic) allies further successes in difficult mountain fighting.

In prepared and naturally strong positions the Italians sought to dispute every foot of ground. They threw freshly brought up forces against our advancing troops, but were not equal to the unconquerable offensive strength of our infantry. Step by step, fighting stubbornly, the enemy yielded. In particularly desperate encounters Quero and Monte Cornelle, extending to the northwest, were taken by storm, and the enemy was driven from his strongly prepared positions on Monte Tomba. The German storming troops and the Second Bosnia-Herzegovina Infantry Regiment especially distinguished themselves in this action. Eleven hundred Italians fell into our hands.

On the lower Piave the artillery duel at times increased to great violence.

Tonight's supplementary report says:

There was violent fighting in the mountains between the Brenta and Piave Rivers.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The Austrian official communication of Saturday as received here today by wireless says:

On the Lower Piave, (Italian Front.)—Reconnoitring detachments on the western bank of the stream had to be withdrawn before strong counterattacks.

Italians Hold Positions in the North.

ITALIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS IN NORTHERN ITALY, Nov. 19.—Conditions were virtually unchanged on the fighting front early today. A powerful attack is proceeding in the north between the Piave and Brenta Rivers, the enemy throwing heavy masses into the line. The Italian artillery and infantry are holding tenaciously. There have been no further attempts to cross the Piave.

HOUSE CROWDED BUT CALM

To Witness the Verbal Duel Between Asquith and Lloyd George.

LLOYD GEORGE WARMS UP

Finally Stirs House to Show of Enthusiasm—Friends Consider It a Triumph.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—I went to the House of Commons today thinking to take such observation as would satisfy the interest and curiosity of the average American, and I set down my impressions without attempting to give attention to the more solid matter, which is covered in your cables published elsewhere.

Although there was almost an unprecedented crowd and a much greater number of tickets had been issued than there were seats, I was fortunate in securing a place in the front row in the Members' Gallery, reserved for representatives of the press from America and the English Colonies. This is located immediately behind the Peers' Gallery, which was packed with men [illegible] Justice Reading, fresh from his sojourn in America and looking fit and smiling, came in with Lord Buckmaster, late Lord Chancellor. The two sat immediately in front of me, near Lord Beresford, long the spokesman for naval ideals in the House and now in the Lords.

The floor of the House was packed, but there was none of the peculiar tension we would experience in similar circumstances in America. A certain reserve of manner among the English makes us feel that they are not entirely in earnest. Undoubtedly the occasion was one of the most important in the history of the world. Yet the House, which was to sustain or reject the Government, showed absolute outward calm.

Moderate Applause for Lloyd George.

Lloyd George entered from behind the Speaker's chair shortly after 3:30. He was received with a moderate demonstration of approval. He walked almost the length of the Ministerial bench and took a seat between Bonar Law and Sir Eric Geddes, the former Baltimore & Ohio official who is now First Lord of the Admiralty and one of the Premier's wheel horses. Sir Eric sat up very straight and rigid, his black hair brushed sleekly back from his young-looking face.

Mr. Asquith came in at the other side at 3:40. He received about the same amount of applause as Lloyd George.

Mr. Asquith sat with folded arms and examined the ceiling. Both he and Lloyd George have mops of hair at the back of their necks, which serve conveniently for the Parliamentary practice of half reclining and resting the head on the back of the bench.

When the speaking began we discovered, owing to the low voices used by the statesman or to acoustic defects of the hall, that the show from the gallery was more or less pantomime.

Promptly at 3:45 o'clock the Premier rose. He spoke feelingly of the death of General Maude. Mr. Asquith followed in the same strain.

The latter then resumed his seat for two minutes. A clerk made some announcement, and Mr. Asquith rose again, and placed his notes in front of him on the flat-topped desk holding the mace and a few books of reference.

Asquith Opens the Attack.

With one hand on the bottom button of his vest and the other clutching the desk, and facing the Prime Minister, who sat only twelve feet away, his legs stretched out and his head reposing in the manner above described, Mr. Asquith opened the much looked for attack.

We are used to more stiffness in a public place than is usual in England, and when I visit Parliament I am always reminded of those old prints which represent life in London a hundred or more years ago.

On Mr. Lloyd George's lap rested a sheaf of notes. He was ready for the fray, except for such points as his opponent's attack might suggest. It didn't seem to me that Mr. Asquith could be dangerous with the manner he adopted, but one must always remember the difference between English reserve and American expressiveness. From the gallery Mr. Asquith seemed to be droning along without putting much impact into the assault. The House was taking it dully. McKenna might have been asleep to all appearances, and the same with many other members.

Didn't Seem Like Great Crisis.

Mr. Balfour, sitting between Bonar Law and Sir Edward Carson, leaned far forward and buried his face in his hands, in which position he remained fully ten minutes. I suspected him of an excursion into the Greek classics. Carson's eyes were shut, but he might have been awake. It was not my idea of what a great crisis ought to look like.

Mr. Asquith's difficulty at times in making out his notes somewhat broke the flow of his discourse.

In looking around for interesting points I noticed the women's gallery, immediately opposite. It was the first time I had seen it minus the bars. It was crowded with occupants, but the frames of the windows which had been left screened to some extent the fair company.

As Mr. Asquith proceeded, the Ministerial bench assumed more and more the old print character. Bonar Law put his feet on the desk from the other end of which Asquith spoke, and Balfour and the Premier followed suit. All three heads were below the level of the back of the bench.

I wondered what Mr. Balfour must have really thought of the vibrant noises made by our American crowds after a life spent in such comparative quiet as the House of Commons.

First Blood Is Drawn.

After twenty minutes Mr. Asquith drew first blood. The Premier sat up, took his sheaf of notes in hand, and began to pencil on the margin. People kept coming in and the House now was crowded, except the gallery assigned to Ambassadors on one side, and the one assigned to members who wish to withdraw from the floor on the other.

There was not room for all the peers who wanted to attend, and below me about twenty nobles were crowded in a gangway, straining to follow the proceedings. Members who came up to their gallery were not finding the performance particularly interesting, and nearly all of them were resting, with hands on the rail and heads on hands, looking up like superannuated cherubim in a Madonna picture.

Asquith went on without being excited himself or exciting anybody else. It didn't seem to be a fight for blood, but more like an exhibition in which the sparring was for points. Asquith recalled the late Senator Gorman of Maryland in appearance and manner. His voice was never raised and he made no effort for oratorical effects. [illegible] lack of oratorical warmth would be considered quite otherwise in this company. It seemed to me that Asquith made a virtue of consulting his notes in the middle of passages in which the words were stirring.

When he sat down he was sufficiently applauded in the conventional English way, but it was unmistakably evident that he had scored no triumph.

Lloyd George Warms to Task.

Lloyd George rose to reply at 4:50. He got more applause and seemed a winner from the first. His voice is less deep than his rival's, but carries further. His style is not conversational. He is a speaker in the sense that we understand public speaking.

The Premier commanded the attention of the House to a markedly greater extent than Asquith. From the gallery he seemed to me to be quite the best looking man on the floor of the House, with clean-cut features and a well shaped head. After all the hard work leading up to the attack he looked as fresh as a daisy.

As he spoke he looked squarely at his antagonist across the desk, who had sat down, crossed his legs, and folded his arms as one who has played out his game and is content.

Lloyd George warmed up more and more as he proceeded. He pounded the table good and hard. The show began to have something of the gladiatorial about it after all.

One of the Premier's earliest references was to America, but it didn't bring any resounding outburst of applause. Lloyd George had won his fight before President Wilson's cable to Colonel House was published. That simply resulted in an embarrassment of riches.

The Premier had spoken a good half hour when he got to Rapallo and began to show the intense oratorical reaction of those living forces of emotion and intellect which make him a great leader of men.

"I made up my mind to take risks and I took them," he said. The House roared approval, and the Premier was easily master of the situation.

"I may know nothing about military strategy, but I know all about political strategy." The House exploded with laughter.

"I took a measure that I thought would arouse public opinion, and it has done it." The House almost shouted.

Real Enthusiasm at Climax.

There was one outburst after another of fine enthusiasm. Tomorrow may tell a different story, but it seemed to me as if the "Premier of Europe" was coming into his own. Warmth and magnetism will win even in this cold country and in these war times the characteristically reserved English public yearns for audacity.

During the last twenty minutes of the speech the opposition to the Premier in the House had so far disappeared as to destroy all psychological sense of a contest. Nearly every face smiled approval upon him

Lloyd George saved his finest eloquence for the few closing sentences and sat down at a moment when the power and influence of his effort were at their height. He assumed a half-reclining position on the ministerial bench and put his feet on the flat-topped desk with the air of a man who preferred the danger and excitement of a tournament to the boredom of Parliamentary interrogation.

GEORGE ANSWERS ASQUITH

Says His Rehearsal of Allied Failures Was Carefully Considered.

UNITY THE ONE SALVATION

Acted to Arouse Public Sentiment in the Allied Nations to Bring It About.

AND NOW THEY ARE ALL "IN"

He Emphasizes Our View That the Council Proposal Did Not Go Far Enough.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—Premier Lloyd George defended himself in the House of Commons this afternoon against the first serious attack his administration has faced, and so far as the Commons is concerned his defense seemed highly successful. The Prime Minister's admirers call it a triumph.

One of the most striking announcements made by the Premier was that one of the dangers facing the Allies had been successfully met—that of the submarine—and he clinched the announcement with the statement that five U-boats had been sunk on Saturday.

The attack on the Premier was focused upon two points—the character of the war council which the Premier announced in Paris and the condemnation of the Allies' past strategy which he pronounced in his Paris speech.

Ex-Premier Asquith was spokesman for the Opposition. His speech was not in the tone of an attack, but a sharp criticism of the new plan for allied control of the war and a vindication of his [illegible] Premier had each had his particular share of responsibility. It was keyed in a much milder strain than the first hostile outburst from the newspapers and sections of the Liberal and Conservative parties, which greeted the Premier on his return home.

The Welsh leader's reply was a characteristic fighting speech of the type which has made him famous. There was no thought of retraction for anything he had said or done, no hint of an apologetic strain, which some expected, for what had been called the Paris indiscretions. There were some passages which would have made old school parliamentarians steeped in Gladstonian traditions of stately courtesy wince, as when he said the attacks made him feel as though he were crossing the Channel in a storm on a small desroyer. But Lloyd George always brings something of the touch of the stump speaker into the Commons, and this gives him a stronger appeal to the greater audience outside.

Mr. Asquith's Speech.

The usual hour devoted to questions having passed, the chief whip, Lord Edmund Talbot, moved the adjournment of the House, thus giving an opportunity for the debate, and Mr. Asquith immediately arose.

Mr. Asquith said that in war responsibility for what was done and what was left undone rested on the shoulders of the Government of the day. It was the business of the advisers of the Government to give counsel as to the best means whereby the policy of the Government could be brought to a successful issue.

It was of vital importance in war that there should be frequent and intimate consultations among the statesmen of the Allies and as complete co-ordination as circumstances permitted. Germany had the advantage that the policy of all the Governments of that alliance was decided by a central authority; Austria and Turkey had no voice in either policy or strategy.

"It is urgent," continued Mr. Asquith, "that the Allies develop by all the means possible the machinery for complete consultation, communication, and co-ordination. We should welcome any scheme or arrangement which would provide for more frequent communication between the General Staffs, supplemented by the appointed of liaison officers of high rank."

Against Interfering With Staffs.

He would deprecate, however, said Mr. Asquith, the setting up of any organization that would interfere with the responsibility of the General Staffs to their Governments, or derogate in any way from the authority and legitimate responsibility of each of the allied staffs to its own people.

Dealing with the Premier's speech in Paris, Mr. Asquith strongly emphasized that there was no mention of the navy, while in many aspects of the war the navy dominated strategical considerations. It suggested unity of control and meant unity of command, but he did not desire to read any such purpose into the Premier's statement. He asked whether the advisory staff officer would have a separate staff and what would happen if his staff and the General Staff were not in agreement. Which would give way or decide the question?

Sir Edward Carson, interrupting: "The War Cabinet."

Mr. Asquith said that the object of the debate was to dispel certain misapprehensions which had been excited, not so much by the scheme as by the Paris speech. Referring to that speech, he went on to say that while he would continue to eschew all unnecessary controversy, he would be failing in his duty if he were to pass it by.

The Premier had selected four cases in criticism of the allied strategy—two, Serbia and Rumania, in which he himself and Mr. Lloyd George had in their respective capacities equal responsibility, and two, Rusia and Italy, which belonged to this year. Mr. Lloyd george's view regarding Serbia was not the view taken by any military authority of weight in this country, he asserted.

The proposition that there was only one front was perfectly sound, and one of the corollaries was that you might render the best service to any ally at one end of the line by exerting the maximum effort at the other end of the line. It was a sacred trust of the Allies to see that the future freedom and security of Serbia and Rumania were adequately assured.

Mr. Asquith went over the Premier's references in his Paris speech to Russia and Italy and asked what the Premier meant by "we." He suggested a doubt whether a council at Versailles last March would have affected the Russian situation. He also asked whether it was not a fact that up to the eve of the German attack General Cadorna was full of confidence and serenity and gave assurances that he would triumph over it.

"Lloyd George regaled the good people of Paris," he added, "with irrelevant rhetoric."

Mr. Asquith doubted whether any allied council would have interfered with the successful offensives in the west in favor of more attractive adventures elsewhere. He concluded:

"We have no reason to be ashamed of our contribution to the war. We have kept the seas free. We have expanded our army into seventy divisions and we have placed our arsenals and credit at the disposal of our allies, and so we will go on to the end."

U-Boats Checked by a New Plan of Campaign; Washington Reports Three Sunk in a Day

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—In view of Premier Lloyd George's statement that the submarine danger was no longer feared and that five enemy submarines were destroyed on Saturday, it may be stated that the constantly growing success of the anti-submarine warfare is the result, not merely of new devices, but also of a plan of campaign which has been worked out in elaborate detail and which has not yet reached its full development.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—This Government received recently the news that three submarines were destroyed by the allied naval forces on one day. An official who has access to the confidential reports of submarine sinkings sent to this Government, and who has not been optimistic over the efforts to overcome the U-boat menace, said he was now of the opinion that by next Spring the allied naval forces would have the German submarine situation well in hand. This official based his opinion on reports recently received.

Full Text of Premier Lloyd George's Speech in Defense of His War Council Proposal

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—When Mr. Asquith finished his speech Premier Lloyd George rose at 4:50 to make his reply. He sat down at 5:52.

The full text of the Premier's speech is as follows:

"My right honorable friend's speech divided itself naturally into two parts. The first dealt with a practical, and therefore most important, question, and the other dealt with the question of the presentment of the case. With regard to the first he examined our proposals in a calm and dispassionate way and I hope I shall follow his example.

"I shall first deal with one or two criticisms which he offered upon the question as to whether it is desirable to secure greater unity of control and, if so, whether we have adopted the right method of securing that unity. That is far more important than anything else which has taken place in Paris or elsewhere.

"I am glad my right honorable friend made my task very much easier by practically accepting the principle upon which we based our action. He admits there is need for greater co-operation and co-ordination.

"I don't think he has denied that the mere machinery which was adopted when he was Prime Minister and which I subsequently adopted, the machinery of conferences and consultations between the Allies, has not proved all that was necessary. What he does deny—and I shall come to that later—is that although the present machinery is inadequate, i.e does not accept my proposition that the Allies have suffered substantially in consequence. On that ground I shall join issue with him later on.

Suffered from Defects of System.

"I think we have suffered grievously, as I explicitly said in Paris, through no fault of any individual or any staff, but owing to defects of the system. That is why I thought the time had come to make a complete change in the method of co-ordinating our position.

"As my right honorable friend has said, the enemy had the advantage in the possession of interior lines. That is the reason why we should do our best to overcome that advantage by co-ordinating our effort.

"This is not the first time that Germany has won through the lack of co-ordination on the part of Allies. In the time of Frederick the Great, in spite of an overwhelming mass of material and men against him, his important success was attributable in the main to the fact that the allied powers did not co-ordinate their efforts. It is essential that we should avoid the mistakes of the past, either in this campaign or elsewhere.

"May I just say that any criticism which I have directed against the past in proposing this change in our method of securing common action was not directed against any staff or any Commander in Chief either in this or any other country. It is the business of the Commander in Chief to look after his own particular front. It is not his business to survey the whole field of operations in Europe, Asia, and Africa. It is quite as much as he can do to look after his own particular front. I made no attack upon General Sir Douglas Haig, Sir William Robertson, or any other army chiefs.

First Proposed by Kitchener.

"Who was it first suggested this idea of co-ordination? I see there is a suggestion (my right honorable friend has not made himself responsible for it, but it has been freely stated outside) that this scheme is part of a civilian attempt to interfere with soldiers.

"Who was the first to suggest it? It was Lord Kitchener in 1915, and he proposed it in almost the very same terms in which I recommended it in Paris. That was in 1915, and I say that if his advice had been followed—I admit there were difficulties then and that [illegible] today—if it had been carried [illegible] the time by the Allies, I say without hesitation that we should have been further forward in the war by now. But here again, I am not criticising anybody. After all, the Allies are taught by the difficulties and disasters which come through lack of common action.

"The second time it was proposed was in July of this year. A meeting of the chiefs of the allied staffs of Great Britain, France, and Italy passed a resolution urging the necessity of unity of action on the western front by the promoting of an inter-allied military organization, which would study and prepare for the rapid movement of troops from one theatre to another.

"Therefore, when it is suggested that there is a device on the part of civilians to get control of strategy, I am glad of this opportunity of quoting the authority of three great soldiers as proof that its initiative and suggestion came in the first instance not from politicians.

"Now I come to the second point. Having argued that it is desirable to got some sort of control at the front, working in co-ordination, what is the best method of doing it? We examined three alternative proposals. The first, put forward in responsible quarters, was the appointment of a generalissimo for the whole of the allied forces. I was utterly opposed to that suggestion. For reasons which it would not be desirable to discuss here, it would be attended with the greatest dificulty.

America for Going Further.

"Another suggestion which found favor not only in France but, I observe, also in America, was that the committee should have greater power than we proposed to confer upon it. Therefore the idea of America is not that we have gone too far but that we have not gone far enough. There are reasons why I think that it would be undesirable to set up a separate authority unless we are driven to it by the failure of the present experiment, for the success of which good will and co-operation on the part of all concerned are essential. Soldiers will represent all allied countries. They will be assisted by technical advisers, drawn from all the allied armies which will help the various Governments to co-ordinate their plans.

"That is the present proposal. What are its advantages? The first is that the information which is at the disposal of each of the allied States will be at the disposal of a central council. The second advantage of the new council is that it will be a permanent body. Under the old system there was only one meeting a year between the allied staffs. That meeting was held for the purpose of surveying the strategy to be pursued on thousands of miles of front, on which millions of men were engaged. It was utterly impossible.

"Therefore, I say, an essential part of this scheme, if it is to achieve its object, is that it should be permanent.

Must Survey the Whole Field.

"It will be the duty of this central body to survey the whole field and not merely a part. It may be said that each general staff does that at present. Well, in a sense they are bound to consider not only their own front but other fronts as well, but it is a secondary matter. They naturally do not devote the same study to it. There is always delicacy on the part of any General Staff to criticise another General.

"With regard to the Italian front it is very difficult to give answers about these matters without saying something which will hurt, perhaps, our ally. My right honorable friend asked me questions about what General Cadorna has said, and I am not sure that I can answer him. I don't want to be pressed about it. I would rather not, because there is a great deal to be said about that and a good deal to be said about our view about the position of the Italian Army that is much more important from the point of view of our country, but it was a view we could not press. We were not responsible for the Italian front.

"The advantage of the Central Council is that we would have the right to press the things we knew, suspected, or believed about the Italian front as much as about our own. The Italian Government knew something about it, but naturally Sir William Robertson would not go on pressing things about another front beyond a certain point. We got to the consideration of them, but it was too late.

"That is one of the difficulties of the old system, but it must come to an end if you are going to insure victory. The Italian front is important to our front, and whatever happens there affects the operations on ours.

"That is why we have come to the conclusion that the mere machinery of liaison officers which we had, that the occasional meeting of Ministers and Chiefs of Staffs once or twice a year is utterly inadequate, utterly inefficient for the purpose of securing real co-ordination, and that you must have a permanent body constantly watching these things, constantly advising upon them, and constantly reporting on them to the Government whether as to the French, Italian, or Russian front.

"With regard to the navy I can assure my Right Honorable Friend that representation of the navy is not an afterthought; it is essential that all information regarding naval operations should be known to these military advisers. That is a different thing to the establishment of a naval council and to co-ordinating naval strategy. A good deal can be said for that. We are suffering from lack of it now, anybody who knows what is happening in the Mediterranean could tell that. There is a great deal to be said for a similar council dealing with naval strategy to that which is set up for military considerations. But that is a very different thing.

"My right honorable friend asked whether the new Council would have their own expert staff or would they be dependent on information supplied by the individual staffs. You cannot set up there a rival intelligence department. It would be utterly impracticable and thoroughly mischievous. We have about the best Intelligence Department probably in Europe, and one of the most distinguished soldiers in the army at the head of it. The only staff you require there is a staff necessary to co-ordinate the information which comes from the various staffs. The final decision must remain with the Government. That is the case now. There will be no change after this has been done.

Paris Speech Was Deliberate.

"My honorable friend challenged some things I said in Paris. Let me say at once about the speech that I considered it carefully. It is suggested that I was assisted by Mr. Churchill. That speech was written and handed over to be interpreted before I saw the right honorable gentleman. I never altered a comma of it, and he never knew what I was going to say until he heard me at that particular meeting.

"Publicity has been worked up into a web of intrigue. If that speech was wrong, I cannot plead any impulse and that it was something I said on the moment. I had considered it, and I did it for a deliberate purpose.

"I have seen resolutions for unity and for co-ordination. Where are they? You might as well throw them straight away into the waste paper basket. Lord Kitchener tried it on Jan. 28, 1915. I have seen other schemes by M. Briand and my right honorable friend. Somehow or other they all came to naught because naturally you get the disinclination of independent bodies to merge their individualities in a sort of common organization. It is inevitable, and I was afraid that this would end in the same way.

"We went to Rapallo with a document—a carefully prepared document. It was passed by the Cabinet before I left, but I was afraid of this. There was a beautifully drafted document prepared by the Allies at two or three conferences. Nothing happened—simply an announcement in the papers that at last we had found some means of co-ordination.

"There had been too much of that, and I made up my mind to take the risks, and I took them, to arouse public sentiment, not here merely, but in France, in Italy, and in America, to get public sentiment behind us, to see that this document became an act.

"It is not easy to rouse public opinion. I may know nothing of military strategy, but I do know something of political strategy. And to convince and to get public opinion interested in a proposal and to convince them of the desirability of it is an essential part of political strategy. That is why I did it, and it has done it. [Loud cheers.] I determined to deliver a disagreeable speech that would force everybody to talk about this scheme, and they have talked about it.

"The result is that America is in, Italy is in, France is in, Britain is in, and public opinion is in, and that is vital.

"The suggestion is made that I am blaming my own country, but I am not.

"My right honorable friend instanced the illustrations of Serbia, Rumania, Russia, and Italy. But France was just as responsible for them as we were, but no more. Italy was surely responsible. It was not a pleasant thing for Italy or for me to remind them that they had lost 2,500 guns. It was more pleasant to say that we had captured a kilometer than to say to Italy that she had lost 200,000 prisoners. It was disagreeable all around, but it was necessary in order to give force to the movement.

"The field is north, south, east, and west. Our business is to bring pressure on the enemy from every point of the compass, and inflict hurt on him where you can.

"That is our argument and that is why we want a central council—a council which will examine the whole field of operations, and not merely a part of it, with the advice of England and her Generals to be given when it is required, and the advice of others to be given to us.

"We need every brain, we need all the experience, we need all the help, and they need it, and their need is greater than ours at the present moment. We want victory, and we will get it, but I don't want the whole burden of winning to fall on Great Britain; and I want, therefore, an interallied council, so to order the whole field of battle that the whole resources of the Allies shall be thrown into the conflict, in order to bring pressure to bear on the enemy.

Could Have Saved Serbia

"With regard to Serbia, if our troops who were sent there had been sent six weeks earlier, we should not have had the Balkan tragedy. I do not withdraw a single syllable I have said. I do not say this because of what my right honorable friend has said, but because of what his friends have been saying. Really when I see it said in certain quarters, 'hands off the army,' it makes me feel as if I am crossing the Channel in a torpedoboat destroyer on a choppy sea.

"I will lay down two propositions and I defy any man to challenge them. The first is that no soldiers in any war have had their strategical dispositions less interfered with by politicians. There has not been a single battalion or gun moved this year except on the advice of the General Staff. Not a single attack has been ordered in any part of the battlefield except on the advice of the General Staff, and there has not been a single attack not ordered.

"The whole campaign of this year has been the result of the advice of soldiers. Never in the whole history of war in this country have soldiers got more consistent and more substantial backing from politicians than they have in this war. I do not mean a backing of speeches; I mean a backing of guns, ammunition, transport, shipping, railways, supplies, and men. Speeches are no substitute for shells.

"I have only twice during this war acted against the advice of soldiers. The first was in the gun program. I laid down a program in advance of the advice of soldiers and against it. I was told then that I was extravagant and that the program would not be necessary. There is no soldier today who will not say that I was right.

"The second time I acted against the advice of soldiers was in the appointment of a civilian to reorganize the railways behind the lines, and I am proud to have done it. There is not a soldier now who will not say that he is grateful that I pressed my advice in spite of the attacks in the press that I was interfering with the soldiers.

"Apart from the great and matchless valor of our troops—and in spite of everything that has been said, no man has used warmer or more deep-felt words of gratitude and admiration for them than I have—apart from that, and the skill in the disposition of our soldiers, what are the two most conspicuous features in the great attacks in Flanders? The first is the overwhelming mass of artillery and ammunition; the second is the fact that the whole supplies are running right into the firing line by arrangements made by my Right Honorable friend, the First Lord of the Admiralty.

"I am not going here to define what the function of a politician is and what the function of a soldier, but do not make any mistake. You want both policy and strategy. They are inextricably interwoven.

"These are things which belong purely to the sphere of the soldier and the politician who meddles in them is mischievous. He is meddling with something which requires years of training. There is also the sphere which is purely political, and the soldier who meddles in that is just as mischievous as the politician who meddles in strategy. Every one thinks he can edit a newspaper, and become a statesman without any training or experience.

"Every one says 'I could show these politicians how to do things.' I should just like to see some of these gentlemen here for five or ten minutes. We would show them that even politics is an art that requires experience.

Must Work Together.

"But there is a vast sphere in war which is partly political and partly military. Supplies, transport, shipping, the distribution of man power, diplomacy, and the morale of the people—all these things are political, even more than they are military, and to divide people into politicians and soldiers in war is unscientific. What you want is the co-operation of both. Let them work together. The men who would try to separate them and foster disunion among them are traitors to their country. We have got to go on, and that is why I am looking forward to co-operation between not merely civilians and soldiers, but between allies and allies.

"Here let me utter one word of warning. When I see paragraphs by people who write recklessly without knowing the mischief they are doing, I think they are doing this in order to put us and our armies on bad terms with France, fostering suspicion of France. Why, Germany is lavishing money to create suspicion, distrust, and jealousy of England in France, Italy, Russia, and America. There is one country where they have conspicuously failed to move a single peasant to anything but heartfelt gratitude for what this country has done, and that country is France.

"Are we to tolerate men in this country who, for purely political or personal reasons, are disseminating distrust and jealousy of France in the hearts of Englishmen? I say we ought to stop this business.

"Since I have been in this war I have striven to get, not merely co-operation between the Allies, but friendship, goodwill, and comradeship. I have done my best to make these people our friends. That is the secret of our success.

"It is essential that you should have this perfect good-will. The idea that poor France—trampled upon, with so many of her sons lost to her forever, with her richest provinces torn from her—should want anything except emancipation from this deadly menace that has threatened her for fifty years is false. That is all she seeks, and I hope, whatever happens to this controversy, that at any rate they will keep their hands and tongues and pens from trying to foster suspicion, jealousy, and distrust between France and ourselves.

Unity the Way to Victory.

"It is better to tell the people what is going on, and I have no anxiety that would modify for one moment my confidence.

"There were two fears, two things that could defeat us.

"There was the submarine menace. If that had wrenched from us the freedom of the seas, then, indeed, our hopes would be shattered. But of the submarine I have no longer any fear. We are on its track, and I am glad to tell the House that on Saturday we destroyed five of these pests of the seas.

"The only other thing is lack of unity. Unity is the only sure way to victory—a victory that will bring peace and healing to a world which is bleeding to death."

Speakers Criticise Premier.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—Admiral Sir Hedworth Meux followed the Premier. He maintained that the scheme the Premier had explained was very different than that outlined in his Paris speech.

Commander Wedgwood characterized the Premier's speech as largely camouflage, and a lamentable descent from his Paris utterance. The council, he said, ought to possess executive powers. If anybody had come to see the Premier's funeral he had found a very wakeful corpse.

Sir Edward Carson confirmed the full approval and confidence of the Cabinet in the document the Premier took to Rapallo and declared that there would be no whittling down, but that the agreement would be rigidly adhered to as one of the most sacred documents formulated by the Allies during the war. If there were a divergency of views on the Central Council, he said, the Government would take the problem back to its own staffs, and it would be decided by those at home.

The debate closed with the withdrawal of the motion for adjournment.

CLEMENCEAU SPEAKS TODAY.

New French Premier's Declaration of Policy Will Be Very Brief.

PARIS, Nov. 19.—Premier Clemenceau and his associates in the new Cabinet decided today upon the terms of the declaration with which they will go before Parliament tomorrow. It is described as a simple, straightforward, and almost laconic document of about 500 words.

The Parliamentary correspondents of the newspapers agree that the new Ministry will receive a vote of confidence by a very large majority after discussion of the interpellations.

SEE WILSON STANCH FOR UNITY IN WAR

President Regarded in Washington as Foremost Advocate of Centralized Control.

PURPOSE IN HOUSE CABLE

Believed to Have Been Sent to Clinch American Approval of Lloyd George's Proposal.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—There is no doubt that President Wilson is strong for unity of war control among the Allies. While officials declined to admit that they knew of any cable message from the President to Colonel E. M. House his representative in the war conference to be held in Paris, they did not hesitate to say that The Associated Press statement from London of the contents of the President's cabled instructions to his envoy was in accord with the attitude of the President as indicated before the departure of Colonel House for Europe.

A strong suspicions exists here that the President communicated with Colonel House directly without taking any one into his confidence as to what was in his message. His object in cabling Colonel House information as to his attitude toward the proposed interallied war council is believed to have been twofold:

First—To furnish an opportunity to Colonel House to make public a statement of the President's position—for it is accepted here that The Associated Press summary of the President's message was inspired—so that all the belligerent powers might know exactly where this Government stood on the question.

Second—To make it clear that if the other allies expected the United States to contribute heavily in men, material, and money to the common cause they must devise some consistent plan of operations against Germany which would bring unity of effort.

A story has been going the rounds that the President remarked on one occasion recently that there were never such strenuous efforts and such heavy sacrifices made, with such little accomplishment, as in this war.

In Advance of an Invitation.

Nothing has come to light to show that the United States Government has been invited to participate in an interallied war council. All the evidence points to the probability that no invitation was ever extended. This is not considered strange in view of the sudden manner in which the suggestion for an interallied permanent body was brought forward. For this reason, it is believed, the President was anxious to let the allied nations know in advance of any invitation that he was hearty in favor of the proposal which Mr. Lloyd George has made, and which has caused a strong drive to be undertaken against the Premier by his political enemies in the United Kingdom.

Officials deprecate the idea that the President had any intention of interfering in British politics. They indicated that there was abundant evidence that the President for a long time had been in favor of establishing unity of military control among the Allies. They pointed to Secretary Lansing's statement to the press on Nov. 7, announcing the appointment of Colonel House and others to represent the United States at the Paris war conference, as showing the desire of this Government for central control of military operations.

German Centralization.

One utterance of Mr. Lloyd George in his speech in the House of Commons today attracted special attention here. This was that America would have preferred a central council with even greater powers than the British Government felt that it could concede. While comment from the highest officials on this statement is withheld, it is taken to mean that President Wilson believes that the way to win the war is to adopt the German system of a complete central military authority, with power not only to prepare plans, but to give the orders for executing them. The main criticism directed at Mr. Lloyd George in the present political flurry in the British Isles is that he would have the inter-allied war council, composed of representatives of France, Italy, and other allied countries, receive the right to direct the commander of the British forces in the field to execute a program with which the British War Office might not be in accord.

Taking Mr. Lloyd George's statement at a literal valuation, it means that the United States Government favors giving the inter-allied war council plenary powers in the conduct of the war. Nobody understanding the amenities of relations between nations, particularly nations allied in a great cause, could believe that the British Prime Minister would have made this important declaration without the consent of President Wilson, which was probably communicated to him within the last few days by Colonel House.

Altogether, the evidence at hand goes to show that President Wilson is the foremost advocate of the formation of an inter-allied war council with extraordinary powers in the conduct of allied military operations. The President is known to be emphatic in his desire for pressing hostilities against the Germans with all the strength and ability that the Allies can command. It is understood that the American representatives to the Paris conference went abroad with the determination, probably with direct instructions from the President along that line, to speak frankly and with emphasis in stating the opinion of this Government as to what was needed to bring success in the shortest possible time to the allied cause. Vigorous naval offensive action, as well as the same sort of action on land, is strong in the President's mind, according to all accounts, and there is a feeling here that the Paris conference will result in the determination of a definite military and naval policy that will be put into effect with the least possible delay.

Bliss As Our Representative.

General Tasker H. Bliss, Chief of the General Staff of the United States Army, who went abroad with Colonel House, has been assigned as military adviser to Colonel House in the Paris conference. General Bliss will reach the age limit of active service on Dec. 31, his sixty-fourth birthday. A report has been going the rounds here that it was the intention of President Wilson and Secretary Baker to keep General Bliss in Europe as the military staff representative of the United States, just as Vice Admiral Sims is abroad in the capacity of the staff representative of the United States Navy to Great Britain and France, although he is also in command of the naval forces of this Government in European waters.

This story suggests that General Bliss will represent the United States on an central inter-allied war council that may be formed. The President has authority to continue him in active service, and the rank and title of General, which he holds by virtue of his temporary assignment as Chief of the General Staff, probably could be continued, so that he might have adequate rank to participate in a body in which the other allies would be represented by the highest ranking military officers.

The Italian Government will take part in the Paris war conference and be represented in any permanent war council. Plans for an allied campaign in Italy are to be considered at the conference, and there is no bar to the participation of the American representatives in these, although the United States is not at war with Austria-Hungary. The Administration is not yet ready to disclose whether President Wilson will recommend to Congress when it meets two weeks from today that a declaration be made that a State of war exists between the United States and the Austro-Hungarian Government, and there has been no authoritative statement on the subject, but everything known tends to strengthen the understanding that the President will make such a recommendation and to this end will be ready to co-operate with Great Britain, France, and Italy in preventing the Austro-German forces from further invasion of allied territory.

BRITISH COMPLIMENT THE HOUSE COMMISSION

Impressed by Americans' Common Sense and Knowledge, Says Official Statement.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The following official statement was issued this evening concerning the visit to England of the American mission headed by Colonel E. M. House:

"The House mission is doing most useful work, and its members have much impressed the different Government departments with which they have discussed common problems of the war.

"Admiral Benson has been in constant touch with Admiral Jellicoe (First Sea Lord) and General Tasker H. Bliss (the American Chief of Staff) with General Sir William R. Robertson, Chief of the Imperial Staff, at Army Headquarters. Oscar T. Crosby, Assistant Secretary of the American Treasury, discussed financial questions with Andrew Bonar Law, the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Bainbridge Colby has been engaged with Sir Joseph Paten Maclay, Shipping Controller, at the Ministry of Shipping.

"Thomas Nelson Perkins, member of the American Priority Board, is dealing with questions of munitions in consultation with Winston Spencer Churchill, Minister of Munitions, and with the First Lord of the Admiralty and the Admiralty Controller, while Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor of the American food administration is investigating the food policy in close consultation with Baron Rhondda, Food Controller, and his officials. Vance McCormick has had many interviews with Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of Blockade.

"The British Ministers are greatly struck with the common sense and knowledge of all these matters shown by their American colleagues."

HOUSE AND VENIZELOS CONFER IN LONDON

Greek Premier Gives President's Envoy Details of Conditions In His Country.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—Eleutherios Venizelos, the Greek Premier and Minister of War, had a lengthy conference today with Colonel Edward M. House, head of the American Mission, at which the Greek patriot gave President Wilson's representative intimate details of the state of affairs in his country. It was their first meeting and was greatly welcomed by both.

Colonel House, who has always been a great admirer of M. Venizelos and a close student of Greek politics, was especially happy over the opportunity afforded to inform himself of the latest happenings in Greece, and the Premier took advantage of the occasion to explain his forthcoming visit to America. It was arranged that they should confer again in Paris, probably during the allied conference at the end of the month.

Before the close of the interview O. T. Crosby of the mission, and M. Cravaris, the Greek Minister, were called into the conference to discuss the financial relations between the United States and Greece. Then followed a conference between General Tasker H. Bliss and Colonel Phrantzes of M. Venizelos's staff.

Among Colonel House's callers today were Charles R. Crane, who has just returned from Russia, and Lord Loreburn, a noted authority on international law. In the afternoon Colonel and Mrs. House were luncheon guests of Lord and Lady Curzon.

NORTHCLIFFE TO RETURN HERE

May Concentrate on Aircraft and Foresees Huge Production Here.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The Globe prints an interview with Lord Northcliffe, in which he says that he will return to the United States as head of the British War Mission after the allied conferences and a trip to the various fronts.

If the British Government desired, he would devote much of this time to the question of aircraft production in the United States, adding:

"My great fear is that the American output will exceed the possibilities of training officers and mechanics. Americans are willing to make any type of engine we ask, in addition to their own Liberty engine."

FRANCIS ADVISES AMERICANS TO GO

Ambassador Obtains Railroad Accommodation for Them to Leave Petrograd at Once.

THOSE IN MOSCOW SAFE

Kerensky's Secretary, Reaching Sweden, Confirms Report of His Chief's Flight.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Americans in Petrograd and Moscow are safe and foreigners are not being molested, according to official advices received at the State Department today from David R. Francis, our Ambassador to Russia, and Consul General Maddin Summers at Moscow. Their messages bore the same date—Saturday, Nov. 17.

The Ambassador said he had advised unattached American men with wives and children to leave Petrograd, and had arranged with the Superintendent of the Railroad Passenger Service to furnish sleeping cars for those who care to avail themselves of the advice. The Consul General at Moscow reports all Americans there safe and well.

Ambassador Francis, in regard to conditions in Petrograd, said that efforts had been made to form a coalition Cabinet, but that the projected plans for a compromise between the Bolsheviki and the Socialists had not been effected. The Bolsheviki were in control both at Moscow and Petrograd.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAPARANDA, Sweden, Nov. 19.—Among travelers who arrived here from Tornea last night was Kerensky's private secretary. He is said to have managed to get out of Russia on a false passport drawn out in the name of an English correspondent.

In conversation the secretary confirmed Kerensky's flight, but he could not say whither he went. He also confirmed the news that the Bolsheviki have the upper hand completely in Petrograd and have even been able to dispatch large forces to Moscow where heavy fighting still proceeds.

He denied that General Korniloff had taken any part in the fighting, for the simple reason that he was still in prison. Rumors were still prevalent in Petrograd of Kerensky's arrest, but he doubted this. He did not think it was the Bolsheviki policy to arrest Kerensky out of fear of his support.

He added that a coalition Socialist Government had, in fact, been formed, and had broken up. For some days Petrograd, he said, has been quite calm but ferment prevails below the surface, and none knows any day what surprise the morrow will bring.

Other travelers from Petrograd report that the lack of food is terrible and growing worse. General Kaledines has stopped all supplies to the capital, which cannot, consequently, hold out for more than a few days. The man of the hour is said to be Kaledines, the Cossack dictator. According to all reports that are reaching here across the frontier, sympathy is growing among the people for restoration of the monarchy. In any event, a military dictatorship is expected shortly.

RUSSIA FACES FAMINE.

Parties Realize Danger and Combine in Some Places to Meet It.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The food problem in Russia suddenly has become more pressing than the question of revolution in Petrograd and Moscow, but also at the front, according to a series of telegrams which reached London today from Petrograd, Moscow, and Odessa.

The spectre of famine appears to have done more than the force of armies to bring about quiet. At many places the Bolsheviki and bourgeoisie, the capitalists and the military cadets, and the Kerenskyites and the Leninites have joined forces against the common enemy—hunger—in a concentrated effort to stave off disaster, which seems almost inevitable in view of the disorganized state of transportation and widespread destruction of stores and supplies.

The political situation, roughly speaking, is that the Bolsheviki have been victorious everywhere. A Moscow telegram says:

"The fighting lasted in the city from the 7th to the 15th, and ended in a complete victory for the Bolsheviki. The casualties aggregated several thousand and the property damage was heavy, including a large loss to residential property in various parts of the city. All is now quiet and excellent order is being maintained."

An Odessa dispatch, dealing with the situation in Kiev, says:

"All is quiet now after a period of serious disorders."

Dispatches from Petrograd say that the Bolsheviki were entirely victorious, that Premier Kerensky has disappeared and apparently is almost forgotten. The dispatches add that there is evidence that reaction already is setting in against the Bolsheviki, but that it is developing in so many divers currents that it is impossible to forecast what course it is likely to take.

KAISER WON'T TREAT WITH THE BOLSHEVIKI

PETROGRAD, Sunday, Nov. 18.—Germany has refused to treat for peace with the new Workmen's and Soldiers' Government in response to a recent proposal, according to the newspapers here, which publish this news as coming from a well-authenticated source.

It is stated that Emperor William announced in his reply that he would treat only with the legal successor to the Imperial Government or with the Constituent Assembly.

In this connection the Volia Norda says it has information that the Workmen's and Soldiers' Government, in the event of its failure to receive replies from the belligerents by Nov. 23 reserves the right to make peace on its own account, after which, if the war continues, Russia will occupy a neutral position.

STOCKHOLM, Nov. 19.—"Brotherly greetings" were recently sent by the Petrograd Bolsheviki to the German majority and minority Socialists. The communication, which was issued and forwarded by the "Foreign Representation" of the Bolsheviki, contains numerous references to capitalists and traitors to the proletariat cause, declares the Bolsheviki program to be peace without annexations or contributions, and calls on the proletariat to rise everywhere to bring to an end the long strife which is otherwise threatened. The communication declares further:

"The Bolsheviki Foreign Representation has received from the French, Austrian, and German Socialist parties assurances that the Russian proletariat can reckon on powerful support."

TELLS ALL WE HAVE DONE FOR FRANCE

All Hopes Surpassed, High Commissioner Tardieu Says in Outlining Accomplishment.

LOAN OF $1,130,000,000

Abundant Army, Supply, and Transportation Aid, as Well as Military and Naval Co-operation.

PARIS, Nov. 19.—"France found in the United States total sympathy in the minds and hearts of the people," said Captain André Tardieu, French High Commissioner to the United States, in a long statement reviewing the work his commission recently carried out in that country.

"France knew she could count on the United States," Captain Tardieu added, "but all our hopes have been surpassed."

The Commissioner gave a brief outline of what was accomplished in each effort for financial, armament, supply, and transportation aid, as well as military and naval co-operation. He paid a tribute to the methodical and successful way in which the enormous task was taken up. Captain Tardieu pointed out that, while prior to May of this year France had borrowed only $650,000,000 at from 6 to 7 per cent., leaving a considerable deficiency to be made up by England in the payment for purchases, the United States will have loaned her $1,130,000,000 between May and the end of December at 4½ per cent. These loans had sufficed for the payment of purchases made during that period in the United States, the Commissioner added.

"The Germans placed their hope in competition between France and the United States for their own requirements in munitions of material, but we have succeeded in increasing importations of powder from the United States 100 per cent. Our requirements in motor lorries and touring cars have been covered up to the end of the first quarter of 1918. We have obtained 300 locomotives, 1,250 miles of track, and 5,000 pieces of rolling stock."

Captain Tardieu expressed confidence that transportation between the United States and France would be greatly improved. He said the increase in tonnage of merchant ships of the United States during 1918 would reach 50 per cent. of the total of last July. Referring to co-operation between France and the United States, the Commissioner said that in order to gain time in the delivery of certain parts of armament the United States had placed orders in France amounting to more than a billion francs.

"Besides furnishing France with great quantities of rolling stock," said Captain Tardieu, "the United States is sending 680 locomotives to its own army in France, which will lighten just so much the burden on the French rolling stock."

The Commissioner expressed himself as pleased with the financial and easy terms on which all transactions with the United States were effected, referring particularly to the fact that the United States undertook the transportation of material ordered for France with the understanding that the financial settlement involved would be put over until after the war. One particular manner in which the United States had greatly aided France, Captain Tardieu said, was in shipping 2,000 agricultural implements for the Agricultural Department in five months.

Altogether, the Commissioner said he was highly gratified by the results of the work of the commission thus far and optimistic as to the final result of negotiations still under way.

"It remains for us in order to attain the desired result," said Captain Tardieu in conclusion, "to create in conformity with the desire of the United States, and in the common interest, real unity in the direction of military and economic affairs. That will be the work of the coming weeks."

HAGUE RULE OBEYED IN PAYING GERMANS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The allegation that while prisoners of war in Germany are being starved German army and naval officers interned in this country are receiving from the United States Government the same rates of pay as officers of corresponding rank in the United States service is confirmed at the Navy Department, where it was said today that this Government is required by the terms of The Hague Conventions to treat interned German officers on an equality as regards pay with officers of the United States.

The obligation in this connection is found in The Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907. "Respecting the laws and customs of war on land." Article 17 of the 1899 convention provides:

"Officers taken prisoner may receive, if necessary, the full pay allowed them in this position by their country's regulations, the amount to be repaid by their Governments."

Article 17 of the 1907 convention, which supersedes the 1899 provision, is as follows:

"Officers taken prisoner shall receive the same rate of pay as officers of corresponding rank in the country where they are detained, the amount to be ultimately refunded by their own Government."

Officials of the Navy Department seemed to have little knowledge of the details of the practice, except that they knew it had been adopted in accordance with The Hague Convention of 1907, which had for its purpose, in part, to carry out the prior Geneva Convention relating to the treatment of prisoners and others in time of war. One statement made in explanation of the administration of the provision was that after the war the United States Government will render to the German Government a bill for the amounts paid to German officers interned in this country and the German Government will render to the United States Government a bill for the amounts paid to American officers held as prisoners of war by the German forces. The difference between the two totals, it was said, must be paid by the Government in behalf of whose officers the larger amount has been expended. The rates of pay of American Army and Navy officers are much higher than the rates for German officers of corresponding rank.

The explanation was made also that money was not actually paid to German officers interned in this country, but they were given a credit amounting to the corresponding pay of their rank in the United States service, and could draw against this for luxuries or clothing. This means that American officers held as prisoners of war in Germany will have to get along on the low pay of German officers, while German officers in internment camps in this country will have more than enough money to enable them to live in comfort, even in this time of high prices.

GUN FIRE INCREASES ON FLANDERS FRONT

British Slightly Improve Positions Near Passchendaele — Wipe Out German Raiding Parties.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports tonight the improvement, in last night's fighting, of the British position northwest of Passchendaele and the killing or capture of most of the Germans who this morning attempted to approach his lines southeast of Poelcappelle. The enemy increased his artillery activity on the Flanders front last night and today.

The text of the night bulletin follows:

On the Ypres battle front we improved our position slightly during the night northwest of Passchendaele. A hostile attack on certain of our advanced posts northeast of Polygun Wood was successfully repulsed.

This morning other hostile parties who attempted to approach our lines southeast of Poelcappelle were caught under our machine gun fire, and the greater part of them were killed or made prisoners.

The hostile artillery has been active during the day east and northeast of Ypres.

Last night the enemy raided our trenches east of Gouzeaucourt. One of our men is missing. We captured a few prisoners in patrol encounters east of Armentières.

Following is the text of the afternoon report:

In the battle area during the night the enemy's artillery was more active. Warwickshire and Scottish troops carried out successful raids last night on Greenland Hill, north of Roeux and in the neighborhood of Monchy-le-Preux.

BERLIN, Nov. 19.—(British Admiralty per Wireless Press.)—Artillery fighting of great intensity is in progress along the northern end of the western front from the coast to the Ypres sector, Army Headquarters announced today. The bulletin reads:

After violent waves of fire early in the morning, the artillery activity in Flanders was small until midday. With increasing visibility the firing was revived in the afternoon. It increased to great violence in some sectors between the coast and Becelaere.

Apart from small forefield engagements, the day was uneventful with the other armies on the western front.

The supplementary statement from General Headquarters tonight says:

In Flanders there were lively artillery duels from Houthulst Forest to Zandvoorde. A French attack in the Chaume Wood was repulsed.

PARIS, Nov. 19.—Heavy artillery fighting is still in progress on the Verdun front east of the Meuse, says this afternoon's official report. The bulletin reads:

On the right bank of the Meuse the artillery fighting continued actively during the night, especially on the front of Chaume Wood. An enemy raid against one of our works northeast of Hill 344 was without success. Another effort against small posts southeast of Malancourt, on the left bank of the river, also was repulsed by our fire.

The night was comparatively calm the remainder of the front.

The official communication from the War Office tonight reads:

In the Champagne, in a raid on the German lines southwest of the Butte du Mesnil, we took prisoners.

On the right bank of the Meuse we carried out a detailed operation this morning in the region of the Chaume Wood, making an appreciable advance and inflicting losses on the enemy.

Artillery fighting was maintained actively along the whole front.

CONFEREES AT BERNE THREATENED ALLIES

Desperate Efforts Made by Pro-Germans to Prevent Peace Council's Failure.

BERNE, Nov. 19.—The project for the so-called League for a Lasting Peace to hold a conference here with delegates from allied countries has utterly failed.

The conference was originally called for Oct. 15 and then was postponed to Nov. 12. Meantime, what virtually was an ultimatum to the legations and embassies of the United States, France, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Belgium, Portugal, Rumania, and Serbia in Switzerland was issued demanding that passes be granted to delegates from these countries.

In efforts to collect more than a handful of pro-German delegates, a circular was sent to citizens of Entente countries residing in Switzerland, entreating them to attend the conference, and containing the equivalent of veiled threats if they failed to come.

The remarkable document received by all the legations began with a polite expression of the aims of the conference. It gave assurances that only questions concerning future world peace would be discussed, and that means for ending the present war would not be touched upon. Two paragraphs further on in the document read:

"We therefore beg you earnestly to arrange with your Government that such persons as wish to participate in the conference at Berne shall receive their passes and permission to pass through the countries en route to Berne. We may expect this will be done all the more because the principal war aims of the Entente Powers will be the principal subject of discussion, and it therefore would be absolutely not understandable if difficulties should be placed in the way of the conference.

"We must disclaim all responsibilities if our request should, contrary to expectations, be refused; for in that case the Entente States would be represented only by such citizens as are staying here in Switzerland."

The note was signed by J. Scherrer-Fuellemann, National Councilor from St. Gall, who is President of the league. The peremptory tone of the note in some of its paragraphs, especially the one demanding an immediate answer, is considered unfortunate. The newspapers in general strongly disapprove the note because M. Scherrer Fuellemann is a National Councilor.

GEN. MAUDE DIES IN MESOPOTAMIA

Famous British Commander Who Captured Bagdad Succumbs After Brief Illness.

PREMIER ANNOUNCES FACT

In House of Commons Lloyd George Reviews His Career and Says the Country Mourns His Loss.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—An official announcement issued today says that General Maude, commander of the British forces in Mesopotamia, died yesterday evening after a brief illness.

Premier Lloyd George, in announcing General Maude's death to the House of Commons today, characterized him as "a great leader of men and a commander of the first rank."

The Premier briefly reviewed General Maude's career and told of the difficulties he overcome, which resulted in the capture of Bagdad and other successes in Mesopotamia.

"Now in his hour of triumph," said the Premier, "he is stricken down by fell disease. The country mourns the loss of one of its valiant sons."

Major Gen. Frederick Stanley Maude had in many campaigns won successive promotions until, when the European war started in 1914, he was a Brigadier General attached to the General Staff of the Fifth Division. He took an active part in the early fighting in France, in which he was wounded.

In 1915 he was made a Major General. In this year he performed his greatest military feat next to the capture of Bagdad. He was placed in charge of the evacuation of the Suvla Bay trenches on the Gallipoli peninsula after the failure of the attempt to take that road to Constantinople. The British troops and Anzacs were so skillfully withdrawn and embarked that the work was practically complete before the Turks discovered it, and the entire operation was performed without a casualty. General Maude was one of the last to leave and his peril was described as follows, more than a year later, by his wife:

The Late Major General Frederick Stanley Maude.

"The General had orders to superintend the complete evacuation of Suvla Bay. Everything had gone well until 4 o'clock at night when, while only a hundred people, including my husband and his staff, were left, the sea became so bad that embarkation operations had to be hurried. When only General Maude and a dozen others were left the Turkish guns began to rain a hail of projectiles on the beach, which became untenable. General Maude and his companions had to abandon their baggage and to find another point from which to embark. The Turks were thus within an ace of having in their power the General who a few months later was to seize Bagdad from them."

General Maude was placed in command of the Mesopotamian Army on Aug. 28, 1916, after a series of British defeats, ending with the capture of Kut-el-Amara, with General Townshend's garrison. Under his command the strengthened British army soon more than retrieved its past defeats in this field. Advancing from the Babylonian plains he recaptured Kut-el-Amara on Feb. 26 of this year, and, driving the Turkish army rapidly ahead of him in a march in which he took many prisoners and guns, he captured Bagdad on March 11, dispelling the German dream of a Berlin-to-Bagdad Railroad. General Maude continued up the Tigris, winning repeated successes. With the capture of Samara the British seized large quantities of war supplies and rolling stock.

General Maude was 53 years old. He was the youngest son of the late General Sir E. Maude. He entered the army in 1884. He fought in the Sudan in the engagements at Hasheen and Tamai, in which he won decorations and promotion. He took part in numerous battles in the Boer war, and was repeatedly mentioned in dispatches, decorated, and promoted. Coming out of that war with the rank of Major, he became private secretary to the Secretary of War. From 1909 to 1912 he was Assistant Director of the Territorial Forces.

BELITTLE BRITISH VICTORIES.

Turks "Explain" Retirements in Palestine and Mesopotamia.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The Turkish official communication, issued Sunday, says:

The great victory the British claim in Palestine arises from the fact that our Gaza-Beersheba line has been withdrawn in conformity with a prearranged plan. Except for the fighting in the neighborhood of Beersheba, there have been no serious engagements in these regions since the evacuation of Gaza and Beersheba.

Our advance posts and detachments in the latter locality showed great valor, but as they failed to retire in time, we had to report heavy losses.

News of a British success in the region of Tekrit (on the Tigris, northwest of Bagdad) is a pure invention. The facts are that our advanced troops there had no main force, and that on their side the British again have withdrawn to Samara without facing the attack of our main forces.

MAJOR DE ROTHSCHILD DEAD

Cousin of Neil Primrose Killed Also in Palestine.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—Major Evelyn de Rothschild, son of the late Leopold de Rothschild, has been killed in Palestine. He was in the same regiment as his cousin, the Honorable Neil Primrose, who died recently of wounds received in the Palestine fighting, and who was the son of the Earl of Rosebery.

ITALIANS ATTACK ON ASIAGO FRONT

binieri. The foregoing alludes to this incident.

No Allied Aid Near Quero.

By The Associated Press.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ITALIAN ARMY IN NORTHERN ITALY, Nov. 18, (Delayed.)—Having felt the Italian steel along the Piave, the enemy is again massing his forces on the north. Austrian prisoners taken at Follina and Fagare say that von Below's forces that were present four days ago at Vidor, on the Piave River, have now been swung northward, probably back of Asiago, on the front between the Piave and Brenta Rivers.

Some of the heaviest blows are now being struck there, and although the enemy forces in that territory already outnumber the Italians, heavy reserves are being added to them, and the pressure has been steadily increased since Friday.

It is not possible to state where the allied reinforcements are, but it can be stated that they are not on the Piave nor in the fighting zone at the north, which now appears to be one of the enemy's chief lines of approach.

It is felt that the allied reinforcements could render incalculable service at this juncture in furnishing reserves to meet this concentration on the north, and the correspondent is authorized to state that this would be considered most timely now.

Austrian prisoners also say that fresh enemy divisions have recently been brought from the Russian front, and the prisoners include a large number of Poles thus far used on the Russian front. They give strange accounts of what is happening along the Russian front, and assert that Russian resistance is giving place to easy living and feasting.

Austrians Slaughtered Near Zenson.

way across the Piave River above Zenson have been thrown into the river, drowned, bayoneted, killed or captured, until now not an enemy remains on the west bank at that most threatened point. The fight was one of the most fearful chapters of the war, and one of the most glorious.

Details of the fight have been gathered from eyewitnesses who saw the fearful carnage through Friday night and yesterday, and who stayed until the whole west bank was cleared except for the corpses on the shore and in the foreground.

The wounded were so numerous that many have not yet received succor. The enemy had staked everything on getting to the west bank of the river, and the Italians staked everything on keeping him on the eastern bank. This nerved both to desperation. The Austrians made the first move Friday in two separate crossings a short distance above Zenson, first at the village of Fagare, and then at an old mill called the Sega Mill, near Follina.

Several circumstances enabled them to pass. They chose a place where a sandbar ran in mudstream, giving them a landing and dividing the main stream into two small shallow currents. Also there was a heavy mist screening their movements. They carried material for an improvised bridge with uprights and iron plates for flooring.

This was about 5 o'clock in the morning, and in the mist of that early hour they got across the second narrow channel to the west bank. The last ten feet the men waded across in water above their waists. In their first surprise rush they swept past four Italian machine gun batteries, capturing their guns and driving the Italians back into the village of Fagare.

Here the real fight began, as the Italians had now recovered from the surprise, and they fought like demons. It was a hand-to-hand fight through the streets of the town, with no place for artillery or machine guns, and the Italians used bayonets, hand grenades, knives and gelatine torpedoes. The Austrians held part of the town near the bank with the Italians on the land side. The Austrians tried to throw a line around the town and succeeded in part on one side, until the Italian batteries to the north got the range of the line outside the shelter of the streets.

Heaps of Austrian Dead.

This line was the first to be demolished, and then the Italians on this side of the town advanced cheering, hewing their way. The enemy held at first, then began to seek cover and finally broke as the Italians pushed into the town back to the river. Some of the Austrians plunged into the water and sought to get to the sand bar. All the machine guns were abandoned. Most of the enemy fell along the water's edge, and an observer who saw the gruesome sight says the bodies on the river bank and in the water reminded him of heaps of seaweed after the tide had gone out.

Further up the river, at the Sega Mill, the other crossing had brought on another bloody fight which lasted until late yesterday, when the whole shore was cleared of living Austrians. But it was lined with dead.

The movement here began late on Friday night and reached its culmination about 11 o'clock Saturday morning. Friday night several Austrian battalions got across under the cover of darkness. They chose narrow channels, and some of the Austrian officers rode across on horseback. They took a position near the town cemetery and opened on the Italians during the night with machine guns. The Austrians carried two searchlights which they played on the Italian position, while the Italians were without searchlights. It was only by the flashes of the Austrian machine guns that the Italians could direct their fire.

Bersaglieri Heroes of the River Battle.

At daylight yesterday the enemy still held his position at the cemetery. The situation began to look serious, and for a time it appeared as though the Italians would have to fall back. But now the famous Bersaglieri Brigade was brought up fresh from its heroic rearguard defense of the main army as it retired on the field. Some of the other troops were from nearby towns, and they were stirred to a last desperate effort to save their homes.

The Italians charged soon after dawn, their line moving straight up the hill to the cemetery. Against machine gun fire and guns on the bank the Italians moved with bayoneta, grenades and torpedoes. It was one of those charges inspired by love of home and country which will live always, and it was irresistible. The enemy wavered and broke just as the Italian artillery, on a nearby height, got the range of the cemetery.

But the main fighting was hand-to-hand, the enemy being pressed back steadily to the river, where they were cut down, drowned, bayoneted or captured. By 10 o'clock yesterday all had been swept away except a few straggling groups, and by noon not one of the enemy's force was left on the western bank.

In addition to some 1,500 killed the enemy lost 1,500 prisoners, including two Colonels and some thirty other officers. All the Austrians' machine guns were captured and are now being used by the Italians.

The fury of the fighting is shown by the fact that the old Sega Mill on the river's brink was taken and retaken six times during the ebb and flow of battle. The mill is full of bullet holes, but shows no evidence of shellfire, indicating that the fighting was entirely at close quarters.

Italian stretcher-bearers did noble service yesterday afternoon in caring for the great number of Austrian wounded who lay along the shore. Two of these stretcher-bearers waded out to the sand bar in mid-stream, where several seriously wounded Austrians had dragged themselves. They were brought back and cared for carefully by the Italian hospital corps. One of these Austrians was wounded seriously in the leg, and he was supported between two Italian soldiers on the way to the receiving station. The Italians recovered their dead, some of them at the water's edge. One gunner was found hanging lifeless over his machine gun.

This summarizes a most desperate fight to preserve the Piave line.

Navy's Defense Thrills Italy.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 18, (Delayed.) — The whole Italian nation read with pleasure and satisfaction today's official reports of the Piave defense, recognizing the splendid work of the navy, to which was intrusted the covering of the extreme right wing on the Isonzo front so as to permit the withdrawal of the long line of battle. The zone allotted to the navy was that of Grado, where was accumulated a large quantity of material for the artillery, the aviation service, and the craft operating in the lagoons. These supplies were indispensable for the defense of the mouth of the Piave and the Venetian lagoons.

In the face of difficulties which can be appreciated only by one who knows the region, this material has been transported to new positions, notwithstanding the pressure of the enemy and the handicap of bad weather. Grado was defended with magnificent courage and doggedness up to the moment when all the supplies had been removed.

All along the front the battle continues fiercely and relentlessly, in the last few days to the advantage of the Italians, who have succeeded in arresting the Austro-German advance, annihilating several contingents and capturing prisoners and machine guns. Military experts, however, warn the public that the critical phase of the invasion has not yet passed, and that danger still exists, which it is better to face frankly. So far the enemy has not had time to bring up his big-calibre guns, having been obliged to reconstruct bridges and mend roads destroyed by the Italians. The Austro-German railways are working feverishly day and night to bring up fresh contingents to be rushed to the Venetian plains, and the Italians must therefore expect an attempt on their part to begin one of the most gigantic battles fought on any European front since the opening of the war. On the other hand, every day the Italians succeed in keeping the enemy in check is a great gain, allowing time for the transportation of Italian and Anglo-French big-calibre guns and allied reinforcements to the front.

Dogged struggles are in progress in the territory between Asiago Plateau and Quero. Up to the present the Italian troops have withstood the enemy unflinchingly.

The no less bloody struggles on the lower Piave are considered as preparing the way for a new enemy offensive on a larger scale. The fighting here is generally to the advantage of the Italians, since all the attempts of the enemy to establish himself strongly on the right bank have been defeated with heavy loss. However, the Italian Army may, for strategical reasons, abandon the Piave line and retire to more easily defensible positions.

HOPES FOR ITALY REVIVED.

Washington Hails Stiffened Defense, but Realizes Northern Menace

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Hopes that the Italian armies might be able to avert what has appeared to be the almost inevitable fall of Venice have been revived by the heroic and determined stand made against the invaders along the lower Piave and in the mountain sector. News that the Italians had dislodged from the western banks of the lower Piave all the Austrian detachments thrown across the stream at four points between San Dona and Salettuol was a source of genuine pride and satisfaction, since it not only disclosed the determination of the Italian forces to make the most determined resistance to the enemy in the face of enormous odds, but also a stiffening of the defense of the lower Piave line.

But this encouraging news is not allowed by the military experts to overshadow the importance of the menace which has threatened the Italians during the whole week that they have been making their stand along the Piave-Feltre-Asiago line—a menace that grows steadily with the daily disclosure that the invaders are driving their bi-wedge deeper and deeper through the mountain area in a colossal effort to turn the left flank of the Italian Army.

Careful charting of all the points gained by the Austro-German units fighting their way across the Asiago Plateau and the pivotal Monte Grappa group of mountains, between the middle Piave and the middle Brenta, shows that yesterday was no exception to the fact that the enemy made his usual daily gain in this region. A most important advance has been made by the invaders engaged in the use of great force against this mountain barrier to the plains, which the Italians have been defending with great tenacity.

It is the capture of Quero, Monte Cornelie, and Monte Tomba, all on the west bank of the Middle Piave, between Feltre and Asolo, on the edge of the plains. The capture of these points is announced in the Berlin afternoon report. No specific mention of it was contained in the afternoon report, but this announcement, when subjected to close scrutiny, bore out the German claim that these points had been taken, for it admitted that west of the Piave the Austro-Germans were attacking the Monfenera and Monte Tomba lines "in great force."

As Monte Tomba is south of Quero, and the German forces are moving along routes which indicate that it is only through Quero that the Monte Tomba region can be reached effectively, it is apparent that the admission that the Monfenera and Monte Tomba lines are under attack means nothing less than that the invaders have moved through Quero.

The safety of the Italian line along the lower Piave is dependent upon the ability of the Italian forces in the Monte Grappa and Asiago sectors to hold intact the northern front, where General Ritter von Krabotin's army is driving its way through a rough and difficult Alpine terrain toward the left wing of the forces defending the plains section of the battle front.

The Italians have been driven so far back southward through the mountains that two more days of yielding as much ground as has been given in any other two days of the last week would put the Germans on the very edge of the plains, within striking distance of the main rail line of communication across the plains from Milan to the lower Piave battlefront.

Austrian Repulse on Lower Piave.

The following summary of the military developments along the Italian front was received in Washington today in a calegram from Rome:

"Yesterday morning Austrian troops, proceeding along the railroad line from Oderzo to Treviso and protected by the numerous houses located on the left bank of the Piave, attacked our positions near Ponte di Piave (across the river, a short distance below Fagare) after a sudden and very intense artillery fire.

"The positions were defended by the 54th Infantry Division, composed of the Novara Brigade and the 3d Bersaglieri Brigade. Overcome by the effect of the asphyxiating gases, our soldiers at the beginning gave way to the advancing enemy, but later, in a dashing counter-attack, our troops succeeded in pushing the Austrians back to the river after a most furious hand-to-hand engagement.

"Units of Bersaglieri are also fighting epic battles between Fagare and San Bartolomeo, where every ravine, every hole, every obstacle is desperately contested between the enemy and the defenders and becomes the centre of the most sanguinary encounters.

"An entire division of Austrians is participating in the battle, which is still raging. The Austrians have been compelled to withdraw to the river edge, where they are stubbornly fighting, with the river behind them, and with little hope of receiving assistance in their difficult situation.

"In this sector alone our soldiers have captured more than 500 prisoners with 22 officers and considerable war material, with many machine guns which were immediately turned against the enemy."

Pleased with New French Ministry.

Another dispatch from Rome reads as follows:

"The advent of Clemenceau to the Presidency of the French Cabinet is favorably commented upon in political circles here. The Italian press attaches the greatest importance to the appointment of Clemenceau because of his energy and because he has always been a strong advocate for a closer political and strategical unity among the Allies.

"Also considered as highly significant is the appointment of M. Pichon to the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, because of his old friendship for Italy. Several newspapers compare Clemenceau with Lloyd George, as both are men of action, and see clearly all situations and never stop before difficulties, but resolutely begin to overcome them without prejudices or personal considerations.

D'ANNUNZIO MISSING.

Italian Poet-Aviator Fails to Return from Flight Over Foe's Lines.

Dispatches received here yesterday from Rome reported that Gabriele D'Amunzio, the dramatist and poet, had failed to return from a recent flight over the enemy's lines in Northern Italy.

Gabriele d'Annunzio won fame as an author and a poet and a playwright before the war began and his native country threw her forces against Austria and Germany. He entered the Italian Army as a private soldier, and, volunteering for aviation, he was commissioned a Lieutenant in the Italian Flying Corps. He was promoted twice for bravery. In August, 1915, he made a flight over Trieste, carrying messages to the Italians of that city, which he dropped as he passed over. He participated in raids against the Austrians, and early this Fall was promoted to be a Major.

D'Annunzio was born in 1864, near Pescara, and after publishing several volumes of poetry his fame became worldwide with the publication of "The Triumph of Death." His play "Saint Sebastian" further added to his fame and he scored a triumph with his play "Francesca da Rimini."

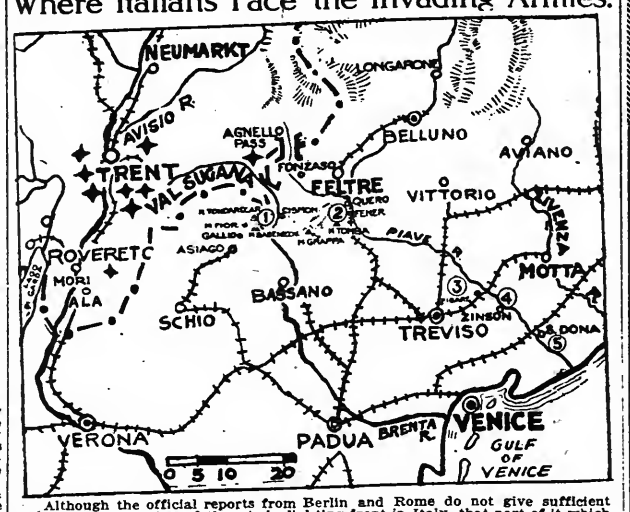
The court also condemned Japanese imperial bonds valued at £79,000 which were found in a suitcase on a Norwegian steamship bound from Bergen for New York, which were of German origin.

Where Italians Face the Invading Armies.



Although the official reports from Berlin and Rome do not give sufficient data for the mapping of the whole fighting front in Italy, that part of it which figures most prominently in the critical operations of the last few days may be described as running in an irregular line to the east from the Asiago plateau past (1) the two mountains, Tondarecar and Badenecche, to the south of (2) Quero and Monte Tomba, (both of which Berlin reports as having been captured,) thence along the eastern bank of the Piave to points near (3) Fagare, (4) Zinson and (5) San Dona, to the mouth of the river.

Do not make it too easy for your employes to commit errors or breaches of trust, even in small matters.

During the last twenty years this Company has paid thousands of fidelity losses, and, in a great many instances, has found the employer negligent in not adopting a proper system of accounting, and was nearly as much to blame as the employes who were guilty of embezzlement. Wool

A good many makers of clothing and a good many weavers of cloth are suddenly finding that wool and cotton mixtures are as good as all-wool fabrics.

Maybe so.

But we prefer the certainty that comes from years of experience with "all wool," to the newly discovered virtues urged for "mixtures."

Expedience may not have found the discoveries, but it helped.

If the war goes on, we all may be forced to mixtures. But if we are, let us not fool ourselves about them.

Meantime, it isn't easy to get all-wool fabrics such as Hart Schaffner & Marx insist on, and they cost more.

Made up as Hart Schaffner & Marx make them, the prices are very little higher than clothes less well made and of compromise goods.

Measured by service, and by the satisfaction that comes with the certainty of good style, they are worth a great deal more.

Suits and Overcoats at $20 that would cost US more if we had to buy them today. Remarkable values at $25, $28, and $30. Suits to $50. Overcoats range to $85.

President Wilson Proclaims a Sweeping Surveillance and Plan of Registration.

WATERFRONTS WAR ZONES

Troops to Guard Piers When Necessary—Enemy Aliens Required to Leave Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—President Wilson today issued a sweeping proclamation to govern the conduct of enemy aliens in the United States and protect shipping and other property from the outrages which have greatly crippled the energies of the nation at war. The proclamation, which will be followed by regulations to be framed by the Attorney General, provides for the most drastic action yet taken against enemies within this country.

Machinery is created which will prevent, by means of military guards, the approach of enemy aliens within prescribed areas of waterfronts and within three miles of navigable streams. Enemy aliens are to be sent out of the District of Columbia and the Panama Canal Zone and denied re-entrance.

All enemy aliens must be registered and cannot travel or change their occupations without obtaining Government consent. In this way the police eye of the nation will be constantly upon these persons, who must report from time to time to Federal and municipal officers. The salient features of the proclamation which are now confirmed were outlined in a Washington dispatch in THE TIMES last Sunday.

By its provisions every unnaturalized German in the United States will be under constant supervision. It is understood that within the next few months a proclamation will be issued to include nationals of Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria. Subjects of these countries are not yet considered enemy aliens, but it was said today that Congress shortly after assembling will be asked to include them in that classification. This would be an act of war.

Text of the Proclamation.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of the constitutional authority vested in them, have resolved, by joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives bearing date of April 6, 1917, "that the state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government which has been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared";

Whereas, it is provided by Section Four Thousand and Sixty-Seven of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

Whenever there is declared a war between the United States and any foreign nation or Government, or any invasion or predatory incursion is perpetrated, attempted, or threatened against the territory of the United States by any foreign nation or Government, and the President makes public proclamation of the event, all natives, citizens, denizens, or subjects of the hostile nation or Government, being males of the age of fourteen years and upwards, who shall be within the United States, and not actually naturalized, shall be liable to be apprehended, restrained, secured, and removed as alien enemies. The President is authorized, in any such event, by his proclamation thereof, or other public act, to direct the conduct to be observed on the part of the United States toward the aliens who become so liable; the manner and degree of the restraint to which they shall be subject, and in what cases and upon what security their residence shall be permitted, and provide for the removal of those who, not being permitted to reside within the United States, refuse or neglect to depart therefrom; and to establish any other regulations which are found necessary in the premises and for the public safety.

Whereas, by Sections Four Thousand and Sixty-Eight, Four Thousand and Sixty-Nine, and Four Thousand and Seventy, of the Revised Statutes, further provision is made relative to alien enemies; and

Whereas, by a proclamation dated April 6th, 1917, I declared and established certain regulations prescribing the conduct of alien enemies;

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, pursuant to the authority vested in me, hereby declare and establish the following regulations, additional and supplemental to those declared and established by said proclamation of April 6th, 1917, which additional and supplemental regulations I find necessary in the premises and for the public safety:

13. An alien enemy shall not approach or be found within one hundred yards of any canal; nor within one hundred yards of any wharf, pier, or dock used directly or by means of lighters by any vessel or vessels of over five hundred (500) tons gross engaged in foreign or domestic trade other than fishing; nor within one hundred yards of any warehouse, shed, elevator, railroad terminal, or other terminal, storage, or transfer facility adjacent to or operated in connection with any such wharf, pier, or dock; and wherever the distance between any two of such wharves, piers, or docks, measured along the shore line connecting them, is less than eight hundred and eighty yards, an alien enemy shall not approach or be found within one hundred yards of such shore line.

14. Whenever the Attorney General of the United States deems it to be necessary, for the public saftey and the protection of transportation, to exclude alien enemies from the vicinity of any warehouse, elevator, or railroad depot, yard, or terminal which is not located within any prohibited area designated by this proclamation or the proclamation of April 6th, 1917, then an alien enemy shall not approach or be found within such distance of any such warehouse, elevator, depot, yard, or terminal as may be specified by the Attorney General by regulation duly made and declared by him; and the Attorney General is hereby authorized to fix, by regulations to be made and declared from time to time, the area surrounding any such warehouse, elevator, depot, yard, or terminal from which he deems it necessary, for the public safety and the protection of transportation, to exclude alien enemies.

15. An alien enemy shall not, except on public ferries, be found on any ocean, bay, river, or other waters within three miles of the shore line of the United States or its territorial possessions; said shore line for the purpose of this proclamation being hereby defined as the line of seacoast and the shores of all waters of the United States and its territorial possessions connected with the high seas and navigable by oceangoing vessels; nor on any of the Great Lakes, their connecting waters or harbors, within the boundaries of the United States.

16. No alien enemy shall ascend into the air in any airplane, balloon, hirship, or flying machine.

17. An alien enemy shall not enter or be found within the District of Columbia.

18. An alien enemy shall not enter or be found within the Panama Canal Zone.

19. All alien enemies are hereby required to register at such times and places and in such manner as may be fixed by the Attorney General of the United States and the Attorney General is hereby authorized and directed to provide, as speedily as may be practicable, for registration of all alien enemies and for the issuance of registration cards to alien enemies and to make and declare such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for effecting such registration; and all alien enemies and all other persons are hereby requested to comply with such rules and regulations; and the Attorney General in carrying out such registration is hereby authorized to utilize such agents, agencies, officers, and departments of the United States and of the several States, Territories, dependencies, and municipalities thereof and of the District of Columbia, as he may select for the purpose, and all such agents, agencies, officers, and departments are hereby granted full authority for all acts done by them in the execution of this regulation when acting by the direction of the Attorney General. After the date fixed by the Attorney General for such registration, an alien enemy shall not be found within the limits of the United States, its Territories or possessions, without having his registration card on his person.

20. An alien enemy shall not change his place of abode or occupation or otherwise travel or move from place to place without full compliance with any such regulation as the Attorney General of the United States may, from time to time, make and declare; and the Attorney General is hereby authorized to make and declare, from time to time, such regulations concerning the movements of alien enemies as he may deem necessary in the premises and for the public safety, and to provide in such regulations for monthly, weekly, or other periodical report by alien enemies to Federal, State, or local authorities; and all alien enemies shall report at the times and places and to the authorities specified in such regulations.

This proclamation and the regulations herein contained shall extend and apply to all land and water, continental or insular, in any way within the jurisdiction of the United States.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia, this Sixteenth day of November, in the year of Our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred and Seventeen, and of the Independence of the United States the One Hundred and Forty-second.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:
Frank L. Polk,
Acting Secretary of State.
(Seal.)

Bars Dr. Muck from Washington.

Dr. Carl Muck, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is an unnaturalized German, and as such cannot enter the District of Columbia unless the President should exempt him from the provisions of the proclamation. The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its opening concert in Washington ten days ago and has a number of others scheduled here. Seats have been sold for the series.

In his opening concert Dr. Muck played the "Star-Spangled Banner," after a protest had been raised, because it had not been included in the program. Dr. Muck had said that it had not been included because it was out of place. He offered his resignation after the uproar, but Colonel Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, has not accepted it.

Restrictions to Apply, It Is Expected, to Male Germans Above 14.

President Wilson's proclamation forbidding enemy aliens from approaching within 100 yards of piers, railroad terminals, storage houses, or near-by waterfronts, it was said last night, would affect about 130,000 male Germans above the age of 14 years in the metropolitan district, which includes Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. All these will be required to register, and it is expected that they will be compelled to report at regular intervals to the Federal authorities.

Until instructions are received from Washington Federal officials in this city will not know what plan is to be adopted for the registration. Several plans have been suggested, among them that of having the local Exemption Boards take up the work. It was pointed out that these boards had already registered Germans between the ages of 21 and 31 years, constituting about 27 per cent. of the whole number.

Another plan suggested is that the Post Office authorities conduct the registration through the branch Post Offices. Still another proposal contemplates having the police in the precincts register enemy aliens.

Federal officials would not venture predictions last night as to which plan was likely to be put into effect. It seemed to be the general opinion that only male Germans above 14 years will be required to register. But no one could say positively that the registration would be limited to them.

All branches of the Federal service will co-operate in carrying out the provisions of the proclamation.

It was reported last night that soldiers of the regular army will be used to enforce the regulations along the waterfront, and that the plans of the waterfronts both of New York City and of New Jersey will be turned over to the military authorities today.

United States Marshal Power of Brooklyn is prepared to carry out any regulations which may be communicated to him from Washington. Conditions along the Brooklyn waterfront will not be greatly changed by the proclamation, as for more than a month the section extending from Newtown Creek to Bay Ridge has been a prohibited zone.

New Telephone Books Issued.

Delivery of the Fall and Winter issue of the New York City Telephone Directory started yesterday. The book contains approximately 425,000 names of telephone subscribers, 25,000 more than were in the 1916 issue. Approximately 730,000 copies will be distributed. A new central office designation, "Whitehall," which has been assigned to a number of telephones in the Battery district of the city, is included in the book, making 87 central office designations for New York City's 700,000 telephones. As usual, the telephone company at this time is also distributing new directories in New Jersey, Long Island, and Rockland and Westchester Counties. More than 1,000,000 books will be distributed.

LABOR INDORSES GOMPERS ON WAR

Pacifists Muster Only 15 Delegates Out of 405 Recorded on Vote of Confidence.

GOMPERS HITS SOCIALISTS

Links Pacifists with Cowards, and Says He Will Do a Man's Part Toward Winning the War.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 19.—Union labor today put its stamp of approval on the attitude of Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, in working hand in hand with President Wilson and placing the needs of the nation above all other considerations in questions involving the workingman's part in a vigorous prosecution of the war against Germany.

The vote of confidence came after more than three hours of debate, in which the pacifist element at the thirty-seventh annual convention of the federation had ample opportunity to express itself. Out of a total of 450 delegates only fifteen were recorded in opposition. The garment workers of New York, under the leadership of Rose Shapiro, was the only organization refusing to go on record on the roll call.

The test of strength came upon a report from the Committee on Resolutions. The committee reported favorably a resolution indorsing the "patriotic work" of the Alliance for Labor and Democracy, which Mr. Gompers took an active part in organizing as an offset to the People's Council, a pacifist organization.

The attack on the resolution was led by Delegate Barnes of Philadelphia. He was supported, in addition to Miss Shapiro, by Delegate Burke of the Sulphite Workers, Joseph P. Cannon of the Mine Workers, and a few others. The alliance and Mr. Gompers were defended by Delegates Walker of Illinois, Brown of Washington, Matthew Wall of the Photo Engravers, George Berry of the Pressmen, Max S. Hayes of the Typographical Union, and Vice President James Duncan.

The opposition discussed the high cost of living, the Arizona miners' strike, the Pacific Coast shipbuilders' fight, the street railway strike in Springfield, Ill., and the suppression of foreign language newspapers, President Gompers giving them full rein.

Pacifists Roundly Condemned.

The supporters of the resolution did not mince words in condemning the attitude of the pacifists.

"Labor has a big duty to perform," said Mr. Berry. "We cannot afford to place ourselves in such a position that we will be misunderstood. If the resolution is rejected, it will go abroad to the world that we have turned down the Government. It is time we should stand up and be counted.

"If we have traitors in our ranks I am ready to eliminate them. We cannot take half-way measures. We must show where we stand for the democracy for which we have been fighting during the last thirty-seven years."

Delegate Walker, who was at the Minneapolis meeting of the Alliance for Labor and Democracy, said the fact that the alliance had declared against treason and sedition seemed to have been unfavorably received by a great many people.

"I have not changed my mind about that," Mr. Walker continued. "Internment should be the fate of those who preach sedition, and, if that is not sufficient to suppress their advocacy of Prussian autocracy, I am in favor of taking whatever steps are necessary to suppress them.

"Pacifists skulking under the cloak of unionism are going as far as they dare in the way of preaching seditics. This war is no child's play. It means more to us than any issue ever raised in the history of the human race."

Delegate Brown suggested that when a vote was taken there should be a roll call.

"Let us stand up and be counted," he said.

Mr. Hayes protested against what he termed the "holier-than-thou" attitude of some of the speakers. None of the members of the federation could be called traitors, he said.

"When President Wilson declared war," he said, "our duty was plain, and that was to stand up and fight this war, no matter how long it takes. We are making economic history more rapidly than we realize ourselves. When such a man as Lloyd George says that the world cannot revert to old conditions he states a great truth. It is realized now that the old individualistic idea of capitalism does not work out in war."

Mr. Hayes predicted Government control of industries, mines and the railroads as the only solution of the economic questions to be met at the close of the war.

President Gompers closed the debate in a ringing speech in defense of the alliance, and his own position.

"By those who have opposed the report and the recommendation of this committee," he said, "my name was not always mentioned, but my position was, and there is no difference between the two. For instance, I may recall that insinuations were made of my nobnobbing with the enemies of labor. Now I have always said this: 'I will go anywhere to bring the message of hope to labor—even into the camp of the enemy.'

"If there is any one who can bring one utterance of mine, made anywhere, that was not in defense of the rights of the laboring people, let him do so. I dare you. I challenge you."

Mr. Gompers went into the history of the People's Council, which he said was an outgrowth of the socialists. He took full responsibility for the calling of the Minneapolis meeting of the alliance.

"The situation demanded," he said, "that there should be a clear-cut distinction between what these people represented and what the trades unions stood for. The fact is that the Socialists, since the Detroit convention, when they failed to break in, have made war upon the American Federation of Labor. They sought to discredit it. They started the Western Labor Union, the American Labor Union, and the I. W. W., and, finally, they started the so-called People's Council. In the one instance, it was rivalry to the American Federation of Labor and, in the last, it was hostility to the Republic of the United States.

"I do not know how many of you feel toward me," said President Gompers in conclusion. "If I am to continue as President of the American Federation of Labor it will be by your votes. You may vote against me if you wish, but I must continue on good terms with myself.

Will Do a Man's Part.

"I am not neutral in this war. Pacifist as I have been all my life, when I find there is a band of murderers abroad and I fail to defend my children, I am not a pacifist, but a coward.

"President Wilson and the members of his Cabinet were peace-loving men. I know of no militarist in their number. But now they are fighting men, and I publicly declare now that I am a fighting man and will continue to fight for the country to which I owe all, the country which I love and in which my hope and aspirations are bound up.

"I propose to do a man's duty in helping to make this war the last war of this world. All my energies shall be laid at the feet of America and of our allies, to do what I can toward the establishment of democracy, even in Germany."

The first vote was taken on a motion by the opposition to table the report. It was offered by Delegate Cannon, who said the alliance was no concern of the federation. It was defeated. The roll was then called on the adoption of the committee's recommendation, resulting in total votes represented: Yes, 21,579; no, 402.

At the opening of the session today Secretary Morrison read a telegram from the Arizona Federation of Labor opposing the resolution submitted to the convention requiring that no person of foreign birth shall be eligible to membership in the Federation until he has become a citizen or has declared his intention to do so.

Garment Fight Preferred.

The long-standing dissension among the unions employed in the garment working trades had an airing when a resolution providing for the establishment of a needles trade department and intended as a move toward peace was reported. In the debate James P. Holland, President of the New York Federation of Labor, sided with the United Garment Workers, stating that the Clothing Workers of America, one of the seceding organizations, was dominated by racial feelings and came under the influence of foreign-language newspapers.

A substitute resolution offered by J. B. Lennon referring the matter to three organizations was lost, 167 to 84, the opposition contending that President Gompers and the Executive Council should direct the negotiations. The vote on the original resolution referring it to the Executive Council carried, 151 to 113.

DROP KRULEWITCH CASE.

Court Dismisses Ante-Election Indictment Against Republican Leader

The indictment against Samuel Krulewitch, Republican leader of the Seventeenth Assembly District, who went to the defense of his son Alvin at a polling place at the September primary election, was dismissed yesterday by Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions on the ground that no evidence had been presented to the Grand Jury to indicate that the elder Krulewitch had attempted to violate the election law.

Alvin Krulewitch and forty inspectors are under indictment for violation of the election law in the Seventeenth Assembly District in the primary election. Alvin Krulewitch is charged with making false returns, in that he made it appear that Mitchel had received forty-eight votes and Bennett none in one of the election districts, whereas Bennett had received eight votes and other ballots were blank. Three inspectors are to appear as witnesses for the prosecution. Assistant District Attorney Olcott said yesterday that he intended to bring the case to trial on Monday.

INDICTS THE MASSES AND 7 OF ITS STAFF

Federal Grand Jury Charges Writers and Artists of Socialist Magazine with Conspiracy.

MANAGER ALSO ACCUSED

Articles and Pictures, the Jury Says, Were Calculated to Interfere with the Draft.

Six men and one woman, comprising part of the business and editorial staff of The Masses, the Socialist magazine, together with The Masses Publishing Company, were indicted yesterday by the Federal Grand Jury for violation of the Espionage act. There were two indictments, one charging the corporation and C. Merrill Rogers, Jr., business manager of the magazine, with having "unlawfully, wilfully, knowingly and feloniously" attempted to use the mails for the transmission of matter declared to be unmailable, and the other, charging Rogers, Max Eastman, editor of the magazine, and others named with him of having conspired, while the country was at war, to cause, or to attempt to cause, "insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States."

That criminal prosecution would follow the failure of The Masses in the courts to restrain the postal authorities from closing the mails to the magazine was clearly indicated during the argument in the lower courts, and in the Circuit Court of Appeals. It was said during these arguments that if the magazine contained matter that barred it from the mails those responsible for the publication of the unmailable matter were subject to indictment.

Immediately after the Circuit Court, on Nov. 9, sustained the action of the postal authorities, Earl B. Barnes, the Government prosecutor, laid the facts before the Grand Jury.

The Masses Publishing Company, which is named in both indictments, is charged with having violated the law at divers times from July 1 to Nov. 19, 1917, by distributing in this city and throughout the United States issues of the magazine for the months of August, September, and October, which contained matter which violated the law. The names of the other defendants in the conspiracy indictment, with the titles of the articles written or pictures drawn by them with the alleged intention of breeding disloyalty and of interfering with the Government in the raising of an armed force, follow:

EASTMAN, MAX, it is charged, between June 15 and Nov. 19, 1917, wrote and caused to be published in the August issue of the magazine an article entitled "A Question."

BELL, FLOYD, accused of the same offense in relation to an article entitled "Conscientious Objectors."

REED, JOHN, accused of having written and published an article called "Knit a Straitjacket for Your Soldier Boy."

BELL, JOSEPHINE, accused of having written and caused to be published in the August issue of The Masses a poem called "A Tribute."

GLINTERKAMP, HENRY J., accused of having drawn for the October issue of the magazine a picture representing a skeleton symbolizing death, taking the measurements of a drafted soldier for his coffin.

YOUNG, ARTHUR, an artist, charged with having drawn a picture entitled "Having Their Fling," which was reproduced in the September issue of The Masses.

Rogers is accused of having, as business manager, provided for the distribution of the magazine "against the peace of the United States and their dignity and contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided."

The conspiracy indictment declares that the defendants "conspired together, with other persons, unknown to the jury, to violate the provisions of Section 3 of Title I. of the act of Congress, approved July 15, 1917, entitled 'An Act to Punish Acts of Interference with Foreign Relations, the Neutrality of the Foreign Commerce of the United States, to Punish Espionage, and Better to Enforce the Criminal Laws of the United States.'"

The illegal acts were committed, the indictment said, "when the United States was at war with the Imperial German Government," and in order "unlawfully and willfully to obstruct the recruiting and enlistment service of the United States." It is alleged that the magazine contained articles, poems, cartoons, and pictures "calculated and intended to induce persons liable to military service to refuse to submit to registration and draft for service and to induce persons available and eligible for enlistment and recruiting to fail and refuse to enlist for service therein."

The indictment of The Masses and its staff, it was said yesterday, placed all similar publications and their editors and managers in the United States in danger of Government prosecution.

In September Mr. Eastman wrote to President Wilson congratulating him for having adopted "the entire animus of the allied war on Germany." In his letter he denied that his magazine was part of an organized propaganda to encourage resistance to the draft.

The indictments were handed to Judge Mayer, who issued bench warrants for the indicted persons. The maximum punishment for the offenses charged is a fine of $10,000 and twenty years' imprisonment.

Gilbert E. Roe, counsel for The Masses, was asked last night to express an opinion on the indictments. He replied by saying that the first he knew of the action of the Grand Jury was when he read about it in the evening papers. He said he had not seen either Mr. Eastman or Mr. Rogers during the day.

Floyd Dell was formerly the literary editor of a Chicago paper. He came to New York several years ago, and has served as managing editor and book reviewer for The Masses.

C. Merrill Rogers, Jr., is a recent graduate of Harvard, where he made no public display of sympathy with radical movements.

Arthur Young is a cartoonist, who has treated principally of political topics. His work has appeared in several prominent magazines.

O'LEARY ADOPTS NEW ROLE.

Anti-War Agitator Wants to Advise the Drafted.

Jeremiah O'Leary, President of the American Truth Society, anti-British agitator, and editor of Bull, a periodical recently barred from the mails because of its anti-American attitude, sent to the newspapers last night a copy of a letter he said he had mailed to Henry W. Taft, Chairman of the War Committee of the Bar of the City of New York, saying he would like to be an Exemption Board lawyer. In the job he seeks Mr. O'Leary would be charged with advising young men seeking exemption as to their legal rights.

SOLDIERS ARREST 200 GERMANS

they should keep half a mile away from the piers. No alien enemies, or persons who could not satisfy the authorities that they were loyal, have been employed on the piers since they were taken over for the use of the army. Those alien enemies rounded up last night were in the prohibited area through disregard of the Government's regulations, and the prompt action of the army was intended, it is supposed, to show all alien enemies that no further dallying with the Government regulations is to be permitted.

The visits of the armed soldiers to the saloons caused consternation among the patrons. Sharp orders that no one was to leave the places until permission was given increased the tension. Patrons were interviewed one by one, and those who were to be held were lined up outside and guarded until all were marched to the pier.

A number of alien enemies were found in boarding houses along the waterfront street.

Despite the warnings of the Government authorities, Germans have continued to haunt their old resorts along the Hoboken river front. Some of the Germans who have lived in the waterfront boarding houses since the days before the United States seized the German liners have stayed there in defiance of regulations from Washington.

Police Were Not Informed.

The round-up had been completed when Hoboken Police Headquarters began to be besieged with women and men who wanted to know what had happened to acquaintances who had been seized by the soldiers. The police knew nothing of it, and it was only after patrolmen had been sent along River Street and to the piers that the police were able to answer inquiries. Several of the men who were seized were released after they were able to give satisfactory evidence of their citizenship.

United States Marshals and Secret Service agents hitherto have conducted the round-ups of Germans, and several weeks ago, when about 100 Germans were seized for violation of the barred zone regulations, it was the Intelligence Department of the Navy, with the New York police, which did the work. Last night's round-up was the first to be made by soldiers, and it was presumed that it was done at the direction of the Intelligence Department of the Army.

Besides the Germans seized by soldiers in Hoboken, twenty-nine Germans who had been employed in shipyards and piers along the Jersey waterfront between Jersey City and Hoboken were arrested last night by Immigration Inspector R. H. Taylor with a squad of guards detailed from Ellis Island. The party was accompanied on its rounds by a United States Marshal. The enemy aliens were taken to Ellis Island.

Find Enemy Aliens in Crews.

Secret Service agents found two enemy aliens working as members of the crews of ocean-going vessels yesterday. One of them is Wilhelm Reyer, who was a member of the crew of the coastwise liner Jamestown of the Old Dominion Line, and the other was Paul von der Heide, who was working on an oceangoing tug plying between New York and Norfolk. Both men were ordered interned for the rest of the war. No information concerning the past activities of the two Germans was made public by the Federal authorities.

Friedrich Weiss, a German taxicab driver, was also interned yesterday. He came to the Federal Building and said he was looking for a job. United States Marshal McCarthy advised him to consult the Mayor's Committee on National Defense. Weiss did so, and when he returned to the Federal Building he was angry through and through.

"What do you mean," he said to the Marshal, "by sending me all over this town looking for a job? And now, just to show you that I don't care anything for this old enemy alien pass, I am going to tear it up right now."

Weiss tore up his pass and started to leave the Marshal's office.

"Come back here," said the Marshal.

"What for?" demanded Weiss.

"Because you are going to be interned," the Marshal answered.

Weiss in now on Ellis Island and will probably be removed to one of the prison camps in the South within the next few days.

Norwegian Sailor Accused.

Tor Lundh, 20 years old, a Norwegian, charged with violation of the Trading with the Enemy act, in that he attempted to deliver mail into a country at war with this nation, was arraigned late yesterday afternoon before Commissioner Cahoone in the Federal Building in Brooklyn and held in $5,000 bail for examination next Friday. Lacking the necessary bonds, he was taken to Raymond Street Jail. The offense with which the prisoner is charged is punishable by a term of ten years in prison, a fine of $10,000, or both.

Lundh is employed by a tourist agency in Manhattan, and according to his own story is listed as a member of the crew of the ship on board of which he was arrested Saturday evening.

In making an examination of the stateroom occupied by Lundh, the searching party found a bundle of letters. These letters were addressed to persons in Norway, with the exception of one found in the centre of the bundle which was addressed to Lundh. This contained a note from Mrs. Gertrude Koester of 138 North La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill., which told Lundh that the writer had received no word from her parents in Germany for more than a year and inclosed a sealed letter to her father with the request that Lundh mail the letter when he arrived at a European port.

Lundh was promptly placed under arrest, and taken to Ellis Island, where he was kept until yesterday. The inclosed letter, written by Mrs. Koester, was addressed to her father in Berlin. It told how anxious the writer was to hear from her parents, and inquired as to their health. It was written in German. From surface indications it would appear that the letter was a harmless family communication; nevertheless, the Federal authorities and Lieutenant George Busby at Police Headquarters are making a thorough investigation in order to determine whether or not it might have some secret significance.

HARD TO GET A JURY FOR MRS. DE SAULLES

Most of the Talesmen Examined Strongly Prejudiced in Her Favor.

FOUR ACCEPTED FIRST DAY

Defense Discloses That It Will Not Call Alienists In Her Behalf.

Only four jurors were accepted yesterday in the first day of the trial of Mrs. Bianca de Saulles before Supreme Court Justice Manning at Mineola on the charge of murder in the first degree for the killing of her divorced husband, John Longer de Saulles, on Aug. 2 of this year.

A large number of jurors disqualified themselves by admitting that they had strong prejudices in favor of the young woman. Many others were opposed to capital punishment. Several, who appeared to take a very stern and inflexible view of the duties of jurors, were objects of peremptory challenges by the defense, while others who wavered on the question of inflicting the death penalty on a woman or admitted that they might be more or less moved by sympathy, were excused by the State. A total of twenty-eight men were examined.

In the questions touched upon in their questions to jurors, counsel for Mrs. de Saulles allowed a liberal view at their plans for defense. These indicated clearly that they will attempt to establish that Mrs. de Saulles acted without premeditation in killing her husband and that she was suffering from "defective reason" when she fired the shots.

Will Not Call Alienists.

The defense of insanity will be presented in a novel fashion, according to statements by Henry A. Uterhart, chief counsel for the defense, who discussed his plans briefly yesterday. The principal innovation will be the absence of alienists. Mr. Uterhart said that he would not, according to the present program, call a single alienist. Mr. Uterhart would not go further and explain just how he expected to convince the jury that the young woman's reason was so affected that she did not know the nature of the act when she killed de Saulles.

One thing which threw light on the strategy of the defense was the question put to every prospective juror whether he would vote to acquit, if he felt any reasonable doubt as to the sanity of the woman at the moment when she killed her divorced husband. When this question was first propounded, Justice Manning said that his view of the law was that the State was not obliged to prove the defendant sane beyond a reasonable doubt, but that only a preponderance of evidence of her sanity had to be established to justify a juror in bringing in a verdict of guilty.

Mr. Uterhart argued that the State had to prove every essential fact beyond a reasonable doubt and that the sanity of the defendant was one of the essential facts. After authorities had been placed before him on the subject, Justice Manning ruled in favor of the interpretation of the law urged by Mr. Uterhart. District Attorney Charles W. Weeks did not make any argument against the plea that it was incumbent on the State to prove affirmatively the young woman's sanity beyond a reasonable doubt.

Counsel for the defense was allowed thereafter to place all jurymen on record as purposing to acquit if they had a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's sanity at the time when she killed De Saulles.

The insistence of the defense on this point, together with the decision to do without alienists, was taken as meaning that a departure from the ordinary practice of presenting the "unwritten law" side of a case would be adopted. It is expected that the defense will content itself by proving from physicians, not alienists, who examined her as to her general health that she was very sick at the time when she killed her husband, and that the temporary suspension of reason in such cases was not infrequent.

The Element of Jealousy.

The novelty which is expected to distinguish this from other similar cases of insanity defense, with the suggestion of an appeal to the "unwritten law," is that the defense may barely sketch a medical and social history for the young woman, raising doubts as to her past mental condition, and then leave the State to wrestle with the problem of establishing her sanity beyond a reasonable doubt. The other point of difference in this case is that, while jealousy played its part, it was not jealousy of another woman, but of the divorced husband's alleged attempts to win the affections of their 4-year-old child away from the mother.

While much hope is pinned on the new technique to be used in the defense in this case, the main strength of the case for Mrs. de Saulles is admitted to be the picture which she makes in court. The pathos of the appearance of the young Chilean woman can hardly be overestimated. The spectators in the courtroom were startled when she walked into the courtroom with Mrs. Phineas Seaman, wife of the Sheriff. She was emaciated, and apparently had barely the strength to stand up. Her face was deathly pale. Very large brown eyes, dark brown hair, and black brows and lashes made the porcelain hue of her complexion more striking. The effect was enhanced by the fact that she was seated beside one of her lawyers, ex-District Attorney Lewis J. Smith, who has florid coloring.

She is only twenty-four years old and looks younger. Her dress seemed to accentuate her youth. She wore a white waist of severe pattern and a black pleated dress. She sat very erect, with her arms folded and her eyes usually on the floor in such a way that the lids were almost closed. Her expression would indicate that she was wholly absorbed in thought and oblivious to what was going on about her. She did not once during the day show the least interest in the proceedings.

The only occasions when she looked up were when Prosecutor Weeks asked prospective jurors if they were personally acquainted with her. After asking if they were acquainted with counsel for the defense, Mr. Weeks would say:

"And do you know Mrs. de Saulles, the young lady here, who is charged with murder in the first degree?"

Mrs. de Saulles would rise slightly and look up, that the talesman might see if he remembered her. None had ever seen her before.

Few Spectators in Court.

For the opening day of a sensational murder trial, with characters prominent in society involved and two continents interested, the courtroom atmosphere was singularly "intimate," like that aimed at in tiny theatres. The courtroom, which is small, is situated in a wing of the Mineola Court House, surrounded by trees. There were very few spectators, the general public not having been welcomed. The attendance was confined almost entirely to court officers, lawyers, reporters, and other directly interested. Mme. Errazuriz-Vergara, the mother of the defendant, was ill and did not attend, but Amalice and William Errazuriz, sister and brother of Mrs. de Saulles, sat in the courtroom. The only relative of the late John Longer de Saulles was his brother Charles.

L. J. Smith, who is now appearing for the defense, was formerly the chief of Prosecutor Weeks. Mr. Weeks was an assistant on the staff of District Attorney Smith when the Carman case was tried, and the two are fast friends. In that trial they were opposed by Mr. Uterhart, with whom Mr. Smith is now associated. Judge Manning, urbane, but formal, contributed to make the proceeding appear more like a social function. The Judge's rulings were in every case accepted without a word and there was nothing on which prosecution and defense clashed.

Prosecutor Weeks was mainly interested in knowing whether talesmen considered that they were made of such stuff that they could do their duty as jurors and return a verdict of guilty if justified by the evidence, even providing that it might mean infliction of the death penalty on a young woman. All four of those acepted met this test satisfactorily to him. Another question which he usually put was:

"Would the fact that the husband of this young woman was divorced for infidelity prejudice you in her favor to such an extent that you could not render a fair and impartial verdict?"

Asked Juror to Be Frank.

Mr. Weeks also questioned jurors carefully as to how much they had read about the case, and jurors who had been too studious of the newspaper accounts of the case were usually dismissed. Stephen Hendricks of Bayville, L. I., one of the talesmen, said that he had read some of the newspaper accounts. He said that he was not much impressed with them, but when pressed he said he was afraid that they had resulted in his forming an opinion in his mind.

"Well, be frank with us. Tell us what it is," said Justice Manning.

"Well, all right," said Hendricks, raising his voice. "I don't think she went there to kill that man."

"Is that opinion so strong that it would require evidence to remove it?"

"Well, there isn't any such evidence. When she went there she understood that the man was away, and—"

"That's enough. That's enough. You may step down," said Justice Manning.

Samuel J. Carl of Oyster Bay appeared to be a likely choice for the jury box for a long time. After the first six jurors had confessed prejudice or disqualified themselves for some other reason, Carl raised hopes that he would do when he was the first of the jurymen to answer unhesitatingly that he would not be swayed by sympathy, and that he did not object to the enforcement of the death penalty against a woman, if she were guilty. Asked if he was sure of himself, he replied emphatically:

"Yes, Sir, I've got a good, strong mind."

After he has been passed by the prosecution to the defense, he was asked:

"Assuming that the young woman here, at the time of the shooting, carried a revolver which had been given to her by the deceased and which he had told her to carry for her protection, would the fact that she had the revolver prejudice you against the defendant?"

"No," replied Carl.

"The fact that she carried it, even though she did not have a license, would not prejudice you against her?"

Carl said that that was another question, if she did not have a license and that he might be prejudiced against her.

Two Diverse Opinions.

John Rader of Oyster Bay said that he had a firm opinion that the young woman was innocent. When Judge Manning asked him if it would require evidence to wipe out this impression, he replied:

"There's no evidence that can wipe it out."

Charles W. Smith of Great Neck, however, looked at it very differently. He was excused on his saying:

"According to what I read in the papers, there is no question about her guilt."

The main questions of the defense were framed to put the juror on record as intending to retain the presumption of innocence in favor of the young woman despite the admission that she had done the actual killing and to acquit her if there was any doubt about her sanity. In questioning jurors on these points, counsel for both the State and the defense appealed to Justice Manning frequently to find sufficiently lucid language to present these complex propositions to the talesmen's minds, and much of the questioning was done by the Justice.

The first juror to be chosen was the twelfth talesman to be examined. He is John C. Bucken, a resident of Rockville Centre and for eighteen years a bookkeeper employed by J. P. Morgan & Co. He is 61 years old, married, and has a family. He will be the foreman. The three others finally chosen were middle-aged, or past, and all three were married and had families. They were Philip H. Ohm, 53 years old, a retired business man of Bellmore, L. I.; Edward W. Pietsch, 58 years old, an electrical engineer on the Clarence H. Mackay estate at Roslyn Heights, L. I., and Louis J. Commella, 51 years old, a real estate operator at Freeport, L. I.

Justice Manning placed the four jurors under the guard of the Sheriff and sent them to the Garden City Hotel, where all the jurors will live until the trial is ended.

The trial will be resumed at 10 o'clock this morning.

MALCOLM GIFFORD KILLED.

Youth Twice Tried on Murder Charge Dies in France.

ALBANY, Nov. 19.—Malcolm Gifford, Jr., son of a manufacturer of Hudson, who was released from custody on a charge of murder after two juries had disagreed concerning his case, was killed in action in France on Nov. 8. This information was received by his parents today in a message from the Canadian War Office. The young man, who was 22, enlisted in a Canadian military unit with fellow-students of Williams College about a year ago.

Gifford was arrested in April, 1914, charged with the murder of Frank J. Clute, a chauffeur, in April of the preceding year. Gifford was then attending a preparatory school in Massachusetts. He came to Albany on the night of April 1, 1913, after attending a dinner dance in Troy. Later he engaged an automobile to take him back to Troy, where he appeared again at the dance with mud-covered clothing. The chauffeur was shot and robbed of a small amount of money that night between Albany and Troy. Although young Gifford never took the stand in his own defense, it was explained in his behalf at the trials that he became mud-bespattered while going to a fire. The mystery of Clute's death has never been cleared.

GERMANS HONOR RODIN.

Like Shakespeare, He "Belongs to Us," Says a Writer.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—German art critics, says an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Amsterdam, devote enthusiastic articles to Auguste Rodin, the sculptor, who died in Paris Saturday. They generally consider him the greatest sculptor France has produced. One writer says:

"Rodin, like Shakespeare and Michelangelo, belongs to us Germans, for our claim upon every art creator is one we will never allow anybody to question."

The Berlin Academy of Fine Arts will discuss at its next meeting the advisability of sending through a neutral country a message of condolence to Rodin's family.

TO CLEAR BROADWAY OF SUBWAY DEBRIS

Contractors Give Assurances That Worst Will Be Over in a Few Weeks.

WORK NOW IN LAST STAGES

Trains to Times Square by Jan. 15 Predicted by Secretary of Association.

On behalf of the Broadway Association, E. W. Estes, Executive Secretary, yesterday began an inquiry among contractors engaged in the building of the Broadway subway to ascertain just how long it would take to remove the débris accumulating for months in the side streets along the route. He found that the contractors were all eager to get through with their work, but that they were delayed by the difficulty of obtaining labor and materials.

Conditions, according to the assurances received by Mr. Estes from various contractors, will improve rapidly from now on. From the engineers of the United States Improvement Company, who are in charge of the work around Greeley Square, Mr. Estes learned that this section of the route will be cleared up in about three weeks.

"Now that the decking is being removed," said Mr. Estes, "we know that the work is nearly completed, but the street in such instances looks the worst. I have also been assured that the pavement on the east side of Broadway between Thirty-second and Thirty-fourth Streets, will be restored within two weeks, and that the west side, on the same two blocks, will be finished in about three weeks.

"The engineers have practically promised me that the work in the vicinity of Greeley Square, where conditions are worse than at any part of the route, will be completed by Dec. 15. Of course, this does not mean that the smooth pavement will go down by that time, because the pavement cannot be laid until several months after the temporary pavement is laid in order to give the backfill ample time to settle.

"The section between Forty and Forty-second Streets is progressing rapidly, and the contractor at that point has more men employed by at least 100 per cent than are working upon any other contract in the subway. When those two blocks are completed and the work is finished from Forty-fifth Street north on the east side of the avenue, no further decking will be taken up until Spring. If the electric power is provided there is no reason in my opinion why trains can't be running to Times Square by Jan. 15."

Although business interests along Broadway had become extremely impatient with the unsightly spectacle of torn up streets, with no apparent move toward improvement, Mr. Estes said the Broadway Association had found it impossible to trace the blame to the contractors.

S. H. Clarke of the Holbrook, Cabot & Rollins Company, which is building the section between Thirty-ninth Street and Fifty-first Street, pointed out yesterday that it was in the interest of the contractor to complete the work as soon as possible, because the constantly rising cost of labor and material was involving them in a greater loss every day. He was paying $2.40 a day for labor which cost him only $1.00 a day when his company took the subway contract. Mr. Clarke said the congestion on the railroad since the United States entered the war made it necessary for the contractor to have as much material on hand as he could get in order to avoid a sudden shortage.

2,389 STREET CASUALTIES.

Motor Vehicles Killed 30 Persons and Injured 1,022 in October.

Police Commissioner Woods made public yesterday the number of street accidents for the month ending Oct. 31. There were 2,389 persons killed or injured in street accidents during the month of October according to the table prepared by the Bureau of Statistics of the Police Department. Of these, 777 were children and 383 persons more than 50 years old. The total casualties are smaller than the corresponding figures for September, which were 2,503, and are much smaller than those for October, 1916, which were 2,633. These figures were abnormally high owing to the traction strike.

Automobiles killed 19 persons on the streets and injured 755, motor trucks killed 11 and injured 267; horse-drawn trucks killed 5 and injured 140; street cars killed 9 and injured 116. There was one person killed and 139 injured in falls from street cars—of these 51 of the injured were over 50 years of age. Stealing rides caused the injury of 33 boys and 1 girl.

The total number of persons killed and injured in collisions involving motor vehicles was 254, as against 280 for October, 1916.

Manhattan had 28 persons killed and 1,396 injured as compared with 31 killed and 1,639 injured during October, 1916. Children killed or injured totaled 407. Brooklyn had a total of 19 killed and 615 injured, of whom 254 were childen. The Bronx had a total of 5 killed and 200 injured, of whom 77 were children. Queens had a total of 7 killed and 94 injured, with 30 children. Richmond had a total of 3 killed and 24 injured, with 9 children.

RECALLS PERRY IN JAPAN.

Aged Survivor of Commodore's Expedition Visits Nippon Again.

TOKIO, Nov. 19.—A visit to Japan by an aged sailor named Hardy, who was a member of Commodore Perry's expedition to this country in 1853, is being made the occasion of many manifestations of friendship toward the United States. Yesterday the old sailor went to Kurihama to visit Perry's landing place, and planted a pine before the Perry monument.

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 19.—W. H. Hardy, who is touring Japan at the request of Japanese school children, is said to be the only survivor of Perry's first landing in Japan. His home is in Portland. As a boy of sixteen he was a member from the boat's crew which rowed the Commodore to shore upon his arrival there.

CHARGES OUT IN CASE OF OUSTED TEACHERS

Definite Accusation Made Preliminary to Hearing, Which Opens Thursday.

PLAN $10,000 DEFENSE FUND

Union Appoints Committee to Speak at Forums and Elsewhere in Defense of Teachers.

The serving of specific charges against Thomas Mufson, A. Henry Schneer, and Samuel D. Schmalhausen, three teachers suspended from De Witt Clinton High School pending trial, was the outstanding feature of yesterday's events in the high school situation.

Mr. Mufson is charged with thinking it proper to be neutral in class while a discussion on the relative merits of anarchism and the present United States Government was going on. Mr. Schneer, among other things, is charged with saying that patriotism should not be discussed in school; that persons wearing the soldier's uniform should not be allowed to speak to the boys in the school assembly. Mr. Schmalhausen does not consider it to be his duty, the charge says, to develop in the students under his control instinctive respect for the President, the Governor, and other Federal, State, and municipal officers.

The charges against the teachers will be heard at 3 o'clock on Thursday afternoon before the High School Committee, of which John Whalen is Chairman, at the Board of Education. The charges were drawn up by Assistant Corporation Counsel Charles McIntyre on evidence furnished by Dr. John L. Tildsley, Associate Superintendent of Schools in charge of high schools.

Several hours after the charges were made public a meeting of the Executive Board of the Teachers' Union was held at the Washington Irving High School, and a committee of three presented to the board evidence which, it was said, would serve as the basis of charges to be preferred by the union against Dr. Tildsley. The charges will be presented to Dr. John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education, after they have been examined by John E. O'Brien, counsel to the union.

It was announced at the union that an endeavor will be made to raise $10,000 as a legal fund to be used in the defense of the three accused teachers. A committee was appointed to speak at forums and before various organizations in order to present the teachers' side of the case. The Chairman of the committee is Abraham Lefkowitz. A Publicity Committee was appointed with Henry R. Linville, President of the union, as Chairman.

What has been advertised as a "monster mass meeting to protest against disloyalty and autocracy in our public schools" will be held tomorrow night at Terrace Garden, Fifty-eighth Street and Third Avenue, under the auspices of the Public Schools Neighborhood Federation and the Teachers' Interests Organization. Charles Rozelle, Jr., will be Chairman and Dr. Tildsley, Dr. Linville, and the three suspended teachers and six transferred teachers have been invited. Dr. Tildsley, it was said last night, will not attend the meeting.

At the Board of Education it was said yesterday that Mr. Rozelle was recently transferred because of "insubordination" and that some time ago he was reprimanded by the Board of Superintendents for charges he is alleged to have made at an anti-Gary school meeting.

President Willcox of the Board of Education denied yesterday the published statement which attributed him as saying that the evidence against the three suspended teachers justified their dismissal. He declared that this was incorrect, and that he had reached no decision and was awaiting with an open mind the evidence to be submitted at the hearing on Thursday.

Officials of the Board of Education are in possession of copies of a publication called The American Teacher, of which Dr. Linville, President of the Teachers Union, is editor in chief, and Mr. Schmalhausen, one of the suspended teachers, is circulation manager. The publication has a department called the "Fluoroscope," in which from time to time various principals of schools and other education officials were lampooned and ridiculed without their names being mentioned.

Isaac A. Dotey, a member of the Faculty of the De Witt Clinton High School, in speaking of conditions in the school yesterday said that the pupils had of late consulted their own individual opinion, and that this had been subversive of discipline. For the last two years, he declared, he had seen the spirit of revolt growing.

HOWE ON AIRCRAFT BOARD.

International Harvester Director to Help War Work.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Appointment of R. F. Howe of New York, a Director of the International Harvester Company, as one of the civilian members of the Aircraft Board, which will be in charge of the development of the air service in this country, was announced today after a conference of the Aircraft Production Board with President Wilson.

Howard E. Coffin, Chairman of the present Production Board, will also head the new board.

West Side Commission Here.

The commission named by the Governor to inquire into the progress made by the city officials in making a contract with the New York Central Railroad Company for the West Side improvement, made a tour of inspection yesterday along the West Side from the company's yards at St. John's Park to Seventy-second Street. Later an executive meeting was held by the commission. Public hearings will shortly be held, at which members of the Board of Estimate and officials of the Public Service Commission and of the railroad company will testify.

CAMP WADSWORTH, SPARTANBURG, S. C., Nov. 19.—At 8:30 o'clock tonight Colonel Frank H. Norton ordered the 105th United States Infantry, made up of the former Twenty-third and Fourteenth Regiments of Brooklyn, to prepare to enter the trenches at 9 o'clock for a twelve-hour tour of duty. At the same time similar instructions were given to the 105th Machine Gun Battalion, formerly Troop A of Squadron A. The moment the orders were issued the Sergeants of both organizations hastened down the company streets arousing the men who had been excused from duty all afternoon. Most of them had turned in for a nap, so when the order to make ready for the severe trench test rang into the tents every man was ready for the ordeal.

There was a great scramble to see which organization would be ready first, and, though they had to march a half mile to the 106th Camp, the members of the old squadron beat their rivals into the firing line. Carrying heavy equipment without ammunition, the soldiers formed in companies and waited silently while every ninth man fell out and got a lantern. Then the Captains whispered and the men moved off.

Dropping softly into the communicating trenches, company after company disappeared along the lanes leading to the firing and reserve trenches. Several hundred went into the third-line trenches, double that number took up position in the second series of earthworks, while the remainder stole quietly into the honor-posts of the fire line. After some slight confusion, in which scraping of shoes over stones caused angry words of caution from the officers, the soldiers settled down to wait, the officers in the meantime were watching the top of a hill to the westward where two blinking lights were to announce that the inspector-umpires were aware that the trenches had been occupied and that the game of war could go on.

A half hour slipped by and the watching officers began to look at each other, almost persuaded that the lights had blinked and that they had missed it. Ten minutes more ticked off on the wrist watches, the only things that made a noise, then a private in the first line trench cautiously lifted his head over the parapet. The lights blinked at once, and the telephone connecting the trenches and the umpires' post buzzed.

The gist of the message was that the umpires had observed the tenantcy of the fortifications, and that the private who had lifted his head above the trench should be removed to the rear at once and placed on the "casualty" list. For the ground in front of the trenches was theoretically covered by German machine guns, and anybody who peeped over a top was theoretically dead.

At 10 o'clock a detail was ordered to creep forward and erect barbed wire entanglements. Though every effort was made to cover their emergence from the trench, the umpires spotted them and they were added to the "casualty list." Hoping to catch the watchers, a second detail was ordered over the top immediately, but when this was only partially successful, the trench officers intimated that no more wire men or patrols would be sent out for the time being.

CROOKS GATHERING FOOD.

Hoover Warns Against Men Posing as Government Agents.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The following warning against thieves was given tonight by Herbert C. Hoover, the Food Administrator:

"We have reports from various parts of the country of crooks, thieves, and confidence operators who are going from house to house purporting to be authorized by the Food Administration or other deparments of the Government to collect or commandeer foodstuffs for the Government or the army.

"I wish to say emphatically that no department of the Government has or will ever make such demands on householders, and that all such people are petty frauds and should be held for the police. The Government agencies are investigating various cases and information is sought of all such persons by this department."

BROKEN MAIN FLOODS MADISON AV. HOMES

Water Fills Basements of Scores of Houses Near Fifty-fourth Street.

Under the increased pressure of the new water system a section of a forty-eight-inch distributing main broke last night in front of 541 Madison Avenue. Before Inspectors from the Department of Water Supply could cut off the flow many cellars in the vicinity were flooded. The damage was all below the street level and, though at the point where the break occurred the sidewalk sagged slightly, it was not necessary to close the street to traffic.

The breaking of the main was discovered by a column of water that suddenly sprang into the air and then quickly subsided. The water continued to make its way into nearby dwellings, rising almost to the street level in some. The water was turned off as soon as the emergency force of the Department of Water Supply got to the scene.

The break is just above Fifty-fourth Street. The gate at Forty-second Street was closed, but the big pipe drained all the way to Seventy-ninth Street before the leak stopped. It was necessary to close other gates before the leak was located and some time was lost in this way.

The residence of John King is directly in front of where the break occurred. The slant of the street is toward the east side and the houses on that side of the street suffered most from the flow. The basement of the Sacred Heart Academy, which runs from 533 to 537, was flooded, as was the apartment house of Charles J. Moller, on the southeast corner of Madison Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street. The cellars at 534, occupied by Frank R. Lawrence, President of the Lotos Club, and 536, in which Edwin Lanc aster resides, contained five feet of water that had flowed through the gratings.

For a time the entire water supply in the district was cut off. Late last night men were digging up the street to find the break.

THANKSGIVING WAR DINNER.

The committee in charge of the Patriotic Society League's Thanksgiving dinner to soldiers and sailors issued an appeal for help yesterday. To act as hostesses at the Madison Square Garden dinner and celebration 150 women are wanted; 150 girls are wanted to distribute programs. Contributions are welcomed. Offers of aid should be made to the headquarters at 2,741 Broadway, telephone Academy 1809. A statement by the committee said that no salaries or commissions are being paid to any one connected with the affair, with the exception of one stenographer.

The clubs of the city have been asked to name members for the committee. The Rotary Club committee has already been formed, and the Union League Club is forming its delegation. The committee expects to have 35,000 at its dinner parties, the chief of which will be in Madison Square Garden. In addition there will be hundreds of smaller dinners at which individuals and organizations will be Thansgiving hosts to soldiers and sailors.

It's Your Own Pocket-Book

But of course that's not your attitude. You're no more inspired than any other business man when you open your door and gaze on a row of empty typewriters waiting for their operators to come back from dictation.

For you know that if four stenographers spend two hours apiece per day in taking dictation, it is equivalent to one stenographer losing 8 hours—or a whole day every day. Which means that the weekly salary of one girl is lost in non-productive work.

The Dictaphone reduces letter-writing to one operation—typewriting—saves all the time your stenographers now spend in taking dictation. It cuts the cost of each letter one-third. Each girl produces at least 50 per cent more correspondence per day. She produces it more easily—with less brain fatigue, less eye and nerve strain.

STATEN ISLAND PUTS IN PATRONAGE CLAIM

Tired of "Taxation Without Representation," Delegation Appeals to Judge Hylan.

NINE GOOD JOBS WANTED

Women Apply to Mayor-Elect for Seats on Bench in the Children's Court.

A delegation of Staten Islanders called on Mayor-elect John P. Hylan at the headquarters of the Business Men's League yesterday and told him that the Borough of Richmond was as tired as could be of "taxation without representation." This purely introductory declaration off their minds, the Staten Islanders served on the Mayor-elect a formal demand for the apportionment of good jobs under his administration to men from Richmond. These were:

Commissioner of Docks and Ferries.
A Commissioner of Taxes and Assessment.
A Deputy Tax Commissioner in charge of a local office.
A Commissioner of Education.
A Resident Assistant Corporation Counsel with office in Richmond.
A Deputy Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas, and Electricity.
A Deputy Charities Commissioner.
A Deputy Police Commissioner, (with local headquarters.)
A representative in the Fire Department.

The delegation was headed by William Wirt Mills, once a Progressive, who during the campaign was chairman of the Citizens Hylan Committee of the Borough of Richmond. Mr. Mills spoke with especial eloquence when he made his plea for the jobs on the list, not as a favor but as Richmond's right. Lest the Mayor-elect should forget the Richmond delegation left with him a memorandum containing a list of the jobs wanted for the borough together with the reasons why jobs should go to Richmond.

The meeting between the Mayor-elect and the city rescuers from the Borough of Richmond occurred behind closed doors. The members of the delegation looked pretty happy when they emerged from Judge Hylan's private sanctum and Mr. Mills said the judge had told them in substance this: "You can carry back the message that your borough will not be overlooked when appointments are made. Go home now and come back after Dec. 15." Mr. Mills said the Staten Islanders surely would be back on the date set by the Mayor-elect and that in the meantime, Judge Hylan had the "tickler" they left with him to make it easier for him to remember.

There was a large sprinkling of women in the crowd of patronage hunters that confronted the Mayor-elect when he appeared at headquarters of the Business Men's League yesterday afternoon, after having been absent since Thursday. After disposing of the Staten Island delegation, Judge Hylan came out into the anteroom for handshaking and brief conversations with those who had called in quest of jobs.

Among the women in attendance was Mrs. Clarice Margolies Baright, who wants an appointment as Justice of the Court of Special Sessions, so she may preside over the sessions of the Children's Court. She was accompanied by Mrs. John Humphrey Watkins, Chairman of the New York County Suffrage Party. The Mayor-elect told her to put in her application, but gave her no encouragement beyond that. Miss Amy Wren, a Brooklyn suffrage leader, called on the Judge and placed before him a demand for an appointment to the Special Sessions Court on behalf of Miss Sarah Stevenson, a Brooklyn suffragist, who wants to sit in the Children's Court in Kings County.

Among callers who were invited into the private office of Judge Hylan was Thomas W. Churchill, former President of the Board of Education and a member of that board at present. Mr. Churchill said he had come to demonstrate to the Mayor-elect the impracticability of such a small Education Board as the one composed of seven members, provided for in the statute which will become effective on Jan. 1.

"The law should be repealed or amended so as to provide for a paid board in which all the seven members would devote all their time to the affairs of the board, or else an unpaid board of twenty-one members," said Mr. Churchill.

Judge Hylan said after his talk with Mr. Churchil that he had not had time to give any consideration to his suggestions. It was suggested, however, that this question, together with the proposed repeal of the pay-as-you-go plan and the necessary legislation to inaugurate the municipal ownership program to which the incoming administration is pledged, would be taken up at a meeting of the members of the new Board of Estimate which has been called for Thursday afternoon.

JORN GETS HIS PAPERS.

Citizenship at First Refused, He Applies to Court.

Karl Edward Heinrich Jorn, a German tenor with the Metropolitan Opera Company, applied yesterday at the County Naturalization Bureau for his second papers. He arrived in this country in 1912, and immediately applied for his first papers. When he asked for his final papers yesterday they were refused, because his wife and five children live in Berlin and refuse to join him here. He was told that he could not become a citizen under the circumstances because the character of a man long separated from his family was always under suspicion.

Jorn displayed a letter from William Jennings Bryan, certifying to his good character, and at the suggestion of Chief Clerk Schluter he applied to Justice Donnelly of the Supreme Court, who questioned him closely about his family relations, and then signed an order directing the issuance of his second papers.

Glowing Claims or this Convincing Test

Marie Rappold

Metropolitan Opera Star Singing in Direct Comparison with Her Re-Created Voice.

Which Will Guide Your Choice?

MR. EDISON is a man of deeds—not words. It is characteristic of him that ever since he accomplished the Re-Creation of Music, he has avoided finely worded claims of superiority.

Instead he has offered the public proof of his success. In repeated tests he has played his Re-Creations in direct comparison with the music of the living artists. And it was impossible for the ear to tell which was which!

In the face of so searching a test, can you be content with the mere claims of supremacy which others offer? Is not Mr. Edison's test, which says not a word, much more convincing.

The NEW EDISON

No Needles To Change
Can Be Made To Play All Makes of Records

Thomas A. Edison.

Before 800,000 people, in the great music centers of the country, Mr. Edison has offered the undeniable proof that he has Re-Created Music.

The great artists who sing for Mr. Edison have appeared, personally, in direct comparison with his Re-Creation of their art.

And the thousands who have heard these tests, have been held spellbound. They heard the living voice. Then they heard its Re-Creation. Their ears failed them.

In vain, they listened for the telltale mechanical quality which is the unmistakable stamp of a talking machine. It was not there.

Only by watching the singer's lips could they tell when they heard the living voice and when they heard Mr. Edison's Re-Creation of it.

None but Mr. Edison has dared to venture this rigid test — the final test of a phonograph.

Shippers Oppose Any Increase and Suggest That Government Loan Needed Funds to Lines.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—George Stuart Patterson, counsel for the Eastern carriers, in closing the rate case before the Interstate Commerce Commission today, said that the 15 per cent. increase sought would be inadequate to maintain the railroads in a state of efficiency, and that they would shortly make application for an additional 15 or 20 per cent. increase on class and commodity rates, and an increase of 10 cents a ton on coal, coke, and ore.

"What is the intention of the railroads?" asked Commissioner McChord.

"To make the sky the limit?"

"As cost increases, rates must go up if we are to succeed on a sound basis," answered Mr. Patterson.

Mr. Patterson said that the present increase, if granted, would not permit the carriers to keep up their maintenance, and that it would be a national menace if the carriers failed to obtain relief in this emergency. He argued that the maintenance of adequate railroad facilities was vitally essential to the winning of the war, and that transportation rates must be adjusted to the higher level of operation cost to enable the roads to serve the nation. The increase granted in June, added to that now proposed, would bring to the railroads only a total of $155,000,000 annually, he said, while twice this amount would be required to cover increased wages and the higher cost of materials.

Discussing the rise in wages, which already has added more than $100,000,000 to the payrolls of the Eastern carriers, Mr. Patterson said that these advances were still going on, the Pennsylvania alone having made increases in wages in the last month amounting to more than $7,000,000 a year.

Competition for Labor.

"As our armies increase into the millions," said Mr. Patterson, "and as the carriers are called upon to meet the competition for labor of industries whose prices are regulated or unregulated, or are called upon to meet the competition for labor of the Government itself, the available supply of labor will decrease and its price will rise, and, unless the Government is prepared not only to conscript labor for the railroads but also to limit its wage, we must assume that the present cost of labor, measured by wage and efficiency, will not decrease."

Mr. Patterson said that so far as it was humanly possible to look into the future there was no immediate prospect of any reduction in the cost of conducting transportation and the cost of maintaining the railroad properties. He said taining the railroad properties. He said that the increased cost of coal for locomotives amounted to $56,000,000 a year, and that the price recently fixed by the Government was higher than that now being paid by many of the carriers. He said the recent increase in wages to the miners would automatically increase the price to the carriers under contracts entered into prior to the fixing of Government prices.

The estimate of the carriers as to the average increase in the cost of materials other than coal is 42 per cent. Mr. Patterson cited the fact that the Government price for pig iron, the products of which are largely consumed by the railroads, was 105 per cent. above the average price paid in the five years before the war, the Government price of copper 68 per cent. higher, and the Government price of coal 115 per cent. higher.

Emphasis was laid by Mr. Patterson upon the fact that the Eastern carriers were finding it increasingly difficult to provide for the upkeep of their properties. He said deferred maintenance was becoming a matter of very serious concern.

It was estimated by Mr. Patterson that for 1917 the eastern roads would show a loss of $81,000,000 in net operating income, despite an increase of $161,000,000 in total operating revenue. This would be a return on property investment of only 5.2 per cent., or less than the amount which the commission in 1914 found as being lower than demanded in the public interest. He said that the Baltimore & Ohio, without further relief in rates, would not earn its dividends; that the Pennsylvania would have a surplus for the year of only 1.6 per cent. on its capital obligations, and that the New York Central would have a surplus of only 1.3 per cent. after the payment of dividends.

"I have not said anything today as to the close and intimate relation which the question of increased rates bears to the successful prosecution of the war," Mr. Patterson said in conclusion. "That has been dealt with at length by Mr. Daniel Willard, of the National Defense, tee of the Council of National Defense, and by r. Paul Warburg, Vice Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, who are far better able than I to speak on that question. They have told you in substance that increased railroad revenues are essential in aiding the Government in the successful prosecution of the war. I may, however, say in conclusinn—I desire to say it with all the earnestness that lies in my power and to you who are so keen to do the right thing—that the inadequacy of the revenues the carriers has ceased to be a purely economic problem, and is today a vital question of the national defense."

Opposition From Shippers.

Counsel for the shippers contended that by use of the additional revenues and surplus the railroads would not be in worse condition than other businesses and that under such circumstances they should not expect to impose additiunal burdens on the shippers. Mr. Patterson replied that the railroads had no desire to make money out of the war, recognized that industry had a great burden to bear and believed that it should be divided rather than placed on one branch of business.

Clifford Thorne, leading counsel for the shippers, said that an increase in freight rates was essentially a tax and that "this is no time for an organized set of business men to ask the American people to increase their burden. Additional demands of the railroads," he continued, "were almost keeping pace with the Government in adding burdens to the people." Mr. Thorne contended that the surplus of the Eastern railroads and their operating revenues this year were ample to maintain them on a sound basis, pay a reasonable dividend and preserve their credit.

Higher rates were attacked by lumber interests through J. V. Norman, representing the Southern Hardwood Traffic Association, and L. C. Boyle, representing the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association. H. S. Cowan, for the National Livestock Shippers' Protective Association, also argued for a retention of present rates.

If the commission believed the advance essential to the country as a war measure, Mr. Boyle said, the lumbermen would accept it without hesitation, but both he and Mr. Norman contended that the plan proposed for the increases would disturb rate relationships, because it affected through rates and would make necessary rearrangements of business built largely around advantages of freight rates.

Mr. Cowan said conditions in the cattle industry were chaotic because of droughts and feed costs and that the raisers could ill afford the advance. He added that he had talked to members of the Senate regarding a possible Government loan to the railroads if necessary, so that rates might not be further disturbed.

The plea of the roads that their credit was being impaired by lack of revenue was attacked by Mr. Norman, who declared that he did not believe credit entered into the subject. Railroad witnesses had testified, he said, that they would not borrow if they could in competition with the Government, and he expressed the belief that the Government should loan money to the railroads at 4 per cent., providing for its return as soon after the war as possible.

"Certainly there should be some relief, but it cannot come from increased rates," Mr. Norman said, "but if they are granted let them come as a war measure with elimination at the close of hostilities."

H. C. Barlow, speaking for natural gas producers, said that the increase would most seriously affect the business in the large Pennsylvania fields of the Pocono Mountains. He declared that the last increase of 5 per cent. so handicapped the natural ice business that it had practically ceased in some Eastern cities, notably Philadelphia.

Benjamin C. Marsh, representing the American High Cost of Living Association, urged that in order to keep down the cost of living the only recourse the Government had in this emergency was to take over the railroads.

ROADS TURN TO WILSON; WILL AVERT STRIKE

President Authorized to Settle Dispute Arising From Brotherhoods' Wage Demands.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—All danger of a strike resulting from the demands of the four railroad brotherhoods for increased wages disappeared today, in the opinion of Judge William L. Chambers of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation with an agreement made by the railroad managers to place their interests in the hands of President Wilson.

This position of the carriers was stated by the Railroads' War Board to Judge Chambers in a letter signed by Chairman Fairfax Harrison. President Wilson was immediately informed of the attitude of the carriers, who say that they are not only favorable to arbitration, but are prepared to go further and, in effect, allow the President to prevent strikes by any plan of settlement he may deem proper.

After his interview with the President, Judge Chambers said he was satisfied there would be no strike. He repeated the agreement of the brotherhoods, which accepts mediation, but rejects arbitration, and said, with reference to the forthcoming interview between the President and the brotherhood chiefs:

"At this meeting we will discuss with the President any plan of settlement agreeable to the President."

Mr. Harrison's letter to Judge Chambers is as follows:

Hon. William L. Chambers, United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, Washington D. C.

Dear Sir: We confirm what we said to you this morning in reply to your inquiry as to what will be the attitude of the railroads with respect to the manner of settlement of any demands for increases in pay or changes in working conditions which during the war may be made upon them by employes.

Speaking for the railroads today, we reiterate our belief in, and general acceptance of, the principle of arbitration. In the midst of war we are, however, prepared to go further. As no interruption of continual railroad operation can be tolerated under war conditions, we are ready, should any crisis now arise, unreservedly to place our interests in the hands of the President for protection, and for disposition as he may determine is necessary in the public interest.

Faithfuly yours,

FAIRFAX HARRISON.

It is believed here that the President will offer a plan of settlement to the brotherhood chiefs next Thursday when they meet with him, and that it will be accepted. The position of the railroads, offering to place the solution of the dispute in his hands, it is declared, will force the brotherhoods to a compromise in order to prevent a strike.

It is expected in some quarters that an agreement to leave the wage question to an impartial tribunal will result from the conference, and already suggestions for means to forestall any further agitation concerning wages and conditions of work during the war, which at the same time would protect the workers in maintaining their standards of life in the midst of war prices, are under consideration. England's example of allowing the Board of Trade to regulate wages at intervals of several months and at the same time adjust rates to protect the railroads is receiving close study.

Some form of continuing arbitration, it is believed confidently, will result from the President's conference and succeeding negotiations. For their part the railroads have indicated that they may ask for some form of control of wages and rates similar to that in effect to regulate coal wages and prices.

WILLARD APPOINTED TO INDUSTRIES BOARD

Wilson Selects the Baltimore & Ohio Road President for Chairmanship.

SUCCEEDS FRANK A. SCOTT

Organization Acts as a Clearing House for the War Needs of the Nation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—President Wilson has appointed Daniel Willard, who is President of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, to be Chairman of the recently created War Industries Board. Announcement of the President's action was made tonight by Secretary Baker, who is Chairman of the Council of National Defense. Mr. Willard, who is now serving as Chairman of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense, succeeds Frank A. Scott, who resigned because of ill-health.

"With the outbreak of the war," said Secretary Baker tonight, "Mr. Willard was among the patriotic men who quickly volunteered their services to the Government. Since that time he has unselfishly devoted his energies to the work of the Council of National Defense.

"In appointing Mr. Willard to the Chairmanship of the War Industries Board the President brings to its activities the services of one who already has familiarized himself, to a large extent, with the task ahead of the board, and likewise has a general knowledge of the relations between industry and the war administration. He is an executive of well-established reputation, and his selection was made in the interest of the continued efficiency and usefulness of the War Industries Board. Mr. Willard will enter upon his new duties immediately."

The War Industries Board was established July 28 by the Council of National Defense with the approval of the President. In addition to other duties the new board assumed those formerly discharged by the General Munitions Board, and consisted of seven members working under the direction and control of the Council of National Defense, its members serving as direct representatives of the Government and of the public interests. Its other members are Lieut. Col. Palmer E. Pierce, representing the army; Rear Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, representing the navy; Hugh Frayne, Bernard M. Baruch, Robert S. Brookings, and Judge Robert S. Lovett.

The War Industries Board acts as a clearing house for the war industry needs of the Government, determines the most effective means of meeting them, and the best means and methods of increasing production, including the creation or extension of industries demanded by the emergency of war, the sequence and relative urgency of the needs of the different Government services, and considers price factors, and, in the first instance, the industrial and labor aspects of problems involved and the general questions affecting the purchasing of commodities.

This board was created to expedite the work of the Government, to furnish needed aid to the departments engaged in making war purchases, to devolve clearly and definitely the important tasks indicated upon direct representatives of the Government not interested in commercial and industrial activities with which they are called upon to deal, and to make clear that there would be total dissociation of the industrial committees from the actual arrangement of purchases on behalf of the Government.

GARFIELD PREVENTS SOFT COAL STRIKES

Fuel Administrator Announces General Acceptance of the Penalty Clause.

EXPECTS GREATER OUTPUT

Question of Cars and Trackage Will Be Taken Up—Criticism of Railroads' Action.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The Fuel Administration announced today that the danger of serious labor disturbances in any of the bituminous coal districts which would reduce the production had been ended by ironclad agreements entered into by miners and operators. Attention will now be centred on the question of cars and operators.

Complaints have come from some quarters, including several of the coal operators, that the railroads were not obtaining the highest efficiency with the facilities at hand, and a virtual pooling of cars and trackage area has been suggested. Some railroads, it has been asserted, have largely "worked their own territory," even when the best results were not obtained for the general movement of coal and the relief of congested conditions.

These matters, it is understood, will be taken up by the Fuel Administration with the railroads and their representatives on committees here, such as the Railroads' War Board, and a thorough co-ordination of effort sought. It is believed by some that much can be accomplished in this direction.

It is possible that the problem may come before the Interstate Commerce Commission if readjustments in the situation are found necessary and do not come voluntarily. It is the intention of the Fuel Administration to see that the greatest results are obtained from the present trackage and car supply.

In regard to the labor situation, which now is more encouraging than at any other time since he took office, Dr. Garfield made this statement today:

"The Fuel Administrator, Harry A. Garfield, has today been advised of the final acceptance by both operators and mine workers of the Southwestern bituminous coal field of the Fuel Administration's penalty clause. The automatic penalty clause, which is an effective safeguard against any suspension of coal production by reason of labor disputes, was made a part of a general wage agreement between workers and operators in the Southwestern field, following a thorough discussion of its provisions by a convention of mine workers at Kansas City.

"The acceptance of the penalty clause in the Southwestern field extends its provisions to practically all of the bituminous fields. Through the efforts of the Fuel Administration all dangers of any considerable halt in the production of bituminous coal through labor difficulties has been eliminated. The Fuel Administration is satisfied that the patriotic co-operation of both mine workers and operators, so thoroughly exemplified in the general acceptance of the penalty clause agreement, can be depended upon to increase the bituminous coal output all along the line."

Orders insuring an adequate supply of coal to the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad and the lines it operates have been issued by the Fuel Administration. They will distribute equitably among the mines the burden of furnishing coal for the roads' operations. Both orders become effective Nov. 19.

Mines now under contract to supply the Chesapeake & Ohio lines with coal will be required to supply their quota at their contract prices. Other mines along the roads which have no contracts with the carriers will be required to furnish a pro rata of the requirements which are not met by the contract mines. Mines not under contract to the road will be required to supply their share at the prices fixed by the Government.

The Fuel Administration today announced the appointment of the following State Fuel Administrators: New Jersey, Richard C. Jenkinson, Newark; Florida, Arthur T. Williams, Jacksonville.

MANY WOMEN SEEKING WORK

War Conditions Force Them to Go Out as Breadwinners.

Many women, ranging in age from 30 to 55 years, have entered the employment field this Fall, and large numbers of them, it was announced yesterday, have registered for full or part time work with the State Public Employment Bureau, 510 Jay Street, Brooklyn, and the Working Women's Protective Union, 9 East Eighth Street. They are registered for employment as seamstresses, housekeepers, hospital attendants, practical nurses, governesses, teachers, companions, shoppers, cashiers, saleswomen, supervisors, investigators, inspectors, office assistants, and social welfare workers. They demand standard wages, ranging from $8 a week up.

The Working Women's Protective Union has been specializing in work for mature women, and since October has registered more than 500 of them. War conditions have led many of these women to seek employment, as in many cases, with the men of the family in the army, additional income is necessary.

OPEN COAL DEPOTS FOR HOBOKEN'S POOR

Small Quantities Are Sold at Ton Prices, Putting Stop to Extortion.

SOLVING FOOD PROBLEMS

New Jersey State Bureau Reports Success of Group Buying from Wholesale Dealers.

The Chamber of Commerce of Hoboken yesterday opened four of the ten coal depot which it will operate this Winter to sell coal to the poor in small lots at the same price they would pay for a ton. The undertaking was a success from the start. At times yesterday there were from 200 to 250 persons in line with all sorts of containers for coal, from tin pans to baby carriages. The coal was sold on a basis of $8.75 a ton, the current quotation in Hoboken yesterday.

The depots were established as a result of an investigation of the fuel situation in Hoboken by a committee of the Chamber of Commerce headed by C. H. C. Jagles. It was found that some small dealers in all parts of the city were selling coal in pail lots at prices ranging as high as $17, $18, and sometimes $20, a ton. The ordinance against selling coal for excessive prices was evaded through sales by the pail, a pail holding about twenty pounds being sold for 20 cents. The poor were forced to buy coal at this price or not buy it at all, unless, as in rare instances, they could afford to buy a whole ton at once.

The Chamber of Commerce decided last week to operate the ten depots this Winter after hearing Mr. Jagles's report. The coal will be sold 100 pounds to the lot, or possibly less, and the purchasers will pay the current ton price for the fuel. The other six depots will be opened in a few days.

The Hoboken Chamber of Commerce has asked neighboring New Jersey municipalities to join in a plan of co-operation by which coal depots may be opened in a half dozen cities. The Hoboken Chamber has offered to operate the depots in Union Hill and West Hoboken. It is expected that the immediate success of the Hoboken depots will lead to the adoption of the plan at once by other municipalities.

Factories in some of the North Jersey cities are buying necessaries for their employes, while the employes of one large company have formed a co-operative buying club that is proving successful, according to a statement issued yesterday afternoon by Alexis L. Clark, Chief of the Bureau of Markets of the State Department of Agriculture.

In many parts of the State groups of consumers are buying food products direct at a vary satisfactory saving. The Canyon Co-operative Society, composed of 2,500 employes of the Prudential Insurance Company of Newark, is doing a weekly business of $2,000. All sorts of staple groceries and household supplies are distributed. In Passaic and Paterson many factories are buying goods for their employes.

A list of wholesale grocery houses, creameries, flour mills, and farmers is supplied by the Bureau of Markets to any organization interested in buying in wholesale quantities. Farmers having hay and grain to sell are invited to inform the bureau, which will endeavor to find buyers. Many carloads of these crops have been sold through this medium.

According to the Bureau of Markets, there is no valid reason why retail storekeepers should charge more for cornmeal, rye flour, and whole wheat flour than for white wheat flour. These products are sold by the mills for less than white flour, yet retailers have been charging more. The Bureau of Markets, it was announced yesterday, was prepared to furnish addresses of grist mills in many parts of the State where high grade products can be bought at about the following prices:

	Per Pound.
Old-fashioned, finely ground table cornmeal	4½c.
Rye flour	5½c.
Whole-ground wheat flour	6½c.
White Winter wheat flour	5½c.
Blended wheat bread flour	5½c.

Some of the mills, it was announced, were prepared to sell quantities as low as five pounds in parcel post packages at a slight increase over the above prices.

FIND A SEVEN-FOOT BOMB.

Eight Sticks of Dynamite Placed in Factory Hallway.

A powerful dynamite bomb, the fuse of which had been lighted and had gone out, was found last night outside the door of the factory of the Queen Petticoat Company, on the tenth floor of the loft building, at 119 West Twenty-fifth Street. It had eight sticks of dynamite in it, and its explosion, according to Inspector Egan of the Bureau of Combustibles of the Police Department, would have wrecked the building. Neither the police nor any one connected with the company could give any reason last night for its being planted where it was found. On the sixth and seventh floors of the building are the shops of Abraham Bauman, who has contracts for the manufacture of uniforms for the navy.

When Simon Silver, designer for the petticoat company, opened the door on his way home about 6:15 o'clock last night, he stumbled over a package. He called Milcon A. Karian, President of the company, and they decided it was a bomb. Detective Callahan took the package to the West Twentieth Street Police Station, where it was examined by Inspector Egan. He found the package about 7 feet long, with a fuse inserted in a hole in one of eight sticks of dynamite. The fuse had been lighted.

FOOD CO-OPERATION WAITS ON HOOVER

State and City Bureaus Ready for Conference with Federal Representative.

CONSIDER CITY FISH MARKET

Offer of Full Supply at Between 4 and 7 Cents a Pound Made by Newfoundland Man.

The National Food Administration has not yet settled upon a plan for co-operation of the State, city and Federal food forces in this city. F. C. Walcott, personal representative of Mr. Hoover, who was expected to be in New York yesterday, did not arrive, and at the City Food Administrator's office there was uncertainty as to just when he would get to this city.

At the office of John Mitchell and the State Food Commission, in the Metropolitan Tower, it was said that the State organization, though it had a definite plan of action and a $1,300,000 appropriation, had to mark time because of lack of definite action by the Washington authorities. Mr. Mitchell repeated that he expected that a basis for co-operation would soon be agreed upon.

Henry Moskowitz, City Commissioner of Markets, has under consideration a plan for bringing fish into the city and selling it at prices much below those now quoted. He was in conference with Lucius P. Brown of the Health Department and Robert Cowan of Newfoundland. The plan was submitted by the latter, who said that it would be possible to supply 12,000,000 pounds of fish annually at an average price of between 4 and 7 cents a pound. Mr. Cowan said that with an investment of $100,000 to equip two refrigerating plants in Newfoundland, together with the purchase of two refrigerator schooners with auxiliary engines, fish could be brought to New York in sufficient quantities to supply the New York market.

Interest has been aroused in the plan of the Labor Food Conference, which represents labor organizations claiming to have 500,000 wage earners in their ranks, to combine with the State farmer organizations in forming a nonpartisan league in New York. The project will be launched at a meeting to be held in Cooper Union next Monday.

"The New York farmers have got to organize," said John J. Dillon, head of the Bureau of Food and Markets. "They have too long been at the mercy of the middlemen. Such an organization as that perfected in North Dakota is a necessity, and I believe that it will be a success. The farmers have awakened to the fact that they have got to save themselves from the middlemen.

"Take the milk situation here. The farmers have agreed not to raise milk prices during December. They do not believe that this has been fair. They are now engaged in getting together feed for their milk cows and the stock that does not give so much milk will have to be neglected because feed is high. This will, of course, cut down the milk supply."

A speaking tour of the State is to be undertaken by Mr. Townley. With him it is planned to have representatives of the labor movement. These will lay the situation before the farmers in many of the counties, and will map out county league organizations. The speakers will emphasize the need of a changed condition that will bring the farmer a fair price for his products, labor a fair wage for its work, and a lowering of price to the consumer by eliminating, at least in part, the cost of the machinery of distribution and the cutting down of profits of companies that have to earn dividends on large stock holdings.

The report of F. A. Purcell, Acting Director of the Central Purchase Committee, that many retail coal dealers are practically without coal, is borne out by a statement made by Joseph A. Wall, Deputy Fuel Administrator of the Bronx. He said in that borough the coal supply was only sufficient for about twelve hours. Mr. Wall said that there are twenty firms in the Bronx who are in the wholesale trade. All of these are waterfront or rail yards. Their business has practically been at a standstill for several days.

Fuel Administrator Cyrus Miller of the Bronx has assigned investigators to ascertain the reasons for the difference between the amount of coal which is known to have been received in the borough as against the amount now on hand there.

The Representative Club, composed of publishers, adopted resolutions at a luncheon at the Hotel McAlpin yesterday protesting to Congress against the act increasing second-class mailing rates and asking for a repeal of the law. The resolution said:

Whereas, With the throttling of the magazines by this law the industrial benefits of the manufacturing interests through the advertising and selling opportunities will also be disastrously affected; be it

Resolved, By the Representatives Club that we urge Congress to repeal this destructive law at its next session, and we pledge our best efforts to assist in securing the repeal.

John Adams Thayer, Secretary of the Periodical Publishers' Association, said that heretofore, in supporting low postal rates for periodicals, Congress had always recognized their educational value. Magazines, he said, through their advertising had developed a huge market place for industries, and he added that the new law would restrict circulation to such an extent that the Government would suffer a loss of income instead of an increase. He said that publishers did not consider the increased postal rate a proper form of war tax, and that while for the duration of the war they would submit to any proper tax, even to confiscation of income, they saw only disaster in the new postal rates.

Your Headaches May Be from Anemia

Sufferers from frequent headache, especially young women, should look to their blood. A large percentage of all headaches comes from anemia—blood poverty.

Other indications of an anemic condition are: lassitude, loss of interest in things and the tendency to postpone the performance of important work.

KEEP GASOLINE OUT OF YOUR CRANKCASE

IF you have been using a low-grade, sluggish gasoline, you know how it works down into the crankcase and thins out the lubricating oil.

The result is great loss of power, dirty spark plugs, excess carbon, and valves that stick.

The best way to rid yourself of these troubles is to use Tydol, the gasoline that vaporizes fast.

Tydol burns up clean, gives rapid flame spread and hot explosion. This means more power and less engine trouble.

The number of New York dealers who handle Tydol is increasing daily. Look for the orange and black sign they display. Once you have tried Tydol you will stick to it.

To reduce friction and wear, use Veedol, the automobile lubricant that resists heat. Reduces sediment by 80% and increases power and gasoline mileage.

FULTZ ACCUSES ORGANIZED BASEBALL OF VIOLATING AGREEMENT WITH PLAYERS

PLEDGE TO PLAYERS MAY BE ABROGATED

Repudiation of Cincinnati Agreement in Baseball Is Expected by Dave Fultz.

NEW RULE FOR THE MINORS

Release of Athletes Without Notice First Step in Contravention of Recent Understanding.

President David L. Fultz of the Baseball Players' Fraternity, which almost caused a general baseball strike last year, stated yesterday that the recent action of the National Association of Minor Leagues in Louisville in empowering the minors to release players without five days' notice indicates that organized baseball now considers the Cincinnati agreement nothing more than "a scrap of paper." It is a repudiation of the agreement which organized baseball made with the fraternity a few seasons ago.

Minor league club owners of Class AA and Class A rating decided they may release players without the customary notice. "I regard this action by the National Association," said Mr. Fultz, "as the first step by organized baseball to repudiate the agreement with the fraternity. It wouldn't surprise me if they now repudiate many of the other promises which they made to the players in the Cincinnati compact."

This was one of the points in the relations between the minor leagues and the players which had much to do with bringing about the threat of a players' strike a year ago. It was said at the time that the strike collapsed that organized baseball was through with unionized baseball, but the action of the minor leagues is the first step toward bringing baseball conditions to where they were before the Players' Fraternity was organized. Hereafter the minors will be able to discharge the players at any time they see fit and the men will have no redress.

President Fultz said that if the officials of organized baseball regarded the agreement with the players only as "a scrap of paper" he could not predict at this time what the attitude of the players would be. If the National Commission makes a complete repudiation of its compact with the players, which was duly signed by all parties concerned, the players are completely at their mercy and can do nothing.

When the baseball strike was called off last year, President Johnson of the American and President Tener of the National League both announced that they would no longer have dealings with the fraternity, but that players as individuals would have the right of appeal to the National Commission. With the game in an unsettled condition on account of the war it is not likely that another effort will be made to bring the players' organization together again.

Many baseball men believe that before another season begins the ranks of the players will be pretty well depleted by the draft, and, with only uncertainty ahead, the baseball officials are certain that any repudiation of the agreement with the Players' Fraternity will not meet with opposition at this time.

President Johnson has sent out notices of the annual meeting of the American League, which is to be held in Chicago Dec. 12, instead of being held this month as had been previously announced. At the close of the season, when President Johnson announced that he would resign from the American League to go into Uncle Sam's service, he announced that the American League would meet in this city at the end of this month. The calling of the meeting at the regular time is taken as an indication that President Johnson will not enter the service, for a while yet, anyway.

In his announcement of the league meeting President Johnson says: "Upon more mature thought I can find no advantage in an early meeting of the American League. For that reason I have determined to hold our anual session according to the provisions of the constitution. Much may happen in the interum which may work to the advantage of the club owners, and they can legislate in a way to better serve their interests."

This statement by President Johnson would indicate that there may be some important developments in both the minor and major league circuits before the time of the annual meeting. Mr. Johnson gave out a statement in Chicago yesterday strongly advocating the shorter schedule although it is known that many of his club owners do not agree with him on this question. It is seldom in the American League that the club owners do not agree with Johnson on every question, but the 140-game schedule proposition has stirred up quite a bit of opposition.

In his statement given out yesterday, the American League President says: "Pooling of players may become imperative to preserve anything like quality in playing strength. If the forthcoming drafts for the National Army take half a dozen regulars away from one or two teams, one or two stars from others, and none at all from some clubs, the result would be a runaway pennant race which would rob the sport of all public interest early in the season."

Johnson and President Barrow of the International League have not yet given up all hope of forming a new circuit with clubs from both the International and American Association. President Barrow is still in Chicago and it is stated that efforts are being made to revise the clubs into a new combination. The new circuit, according to Barrow, was to have been called the Continental League and not the Union League. As both Barrow and Mike Sexton, President of the National Association, are pessimistic about the minor league situation next season, it is believed that they are trying to persuade President Johnson to use his influence to promote a new circuit in spite of the fact that it was turned down by the minor league convention in Louisville.

Jacob Ruppert, President, and Harry Sparrow, Secretary of the Yankees, have returned from the minor league conclave in Louisville with the announcement that Manager Miller Huggins was unable to effect any trades. The air abounded with rumors but when it came down to business none of the baseball people were offering anything inviting in the way of talent. Colonel Ruppert stated that there would probably be nothing definite done about buying or trading players until the major league meetings next month. Huggins went to his home in St. Louis but will return here shortly to make plans for the Spring training trip.

WANTS INTERBOROUGH GAME

Coach Alford of Flushing Seeks Post-Season Fray with Erasmus.

Football teams representing the Flushing and Erasmus Hall High Schools, the latter the season's champions of Brooklyn, will meet in a post-season interborough game shortly after Thanksgiving Day if the plans of Coach Alford of the Flushing team materialize. Coach Alford stated yesterday that he was ready to pit his eleven against the Brooklyn championship team in a benefit game for the Red Cross or some other war relief fund if the consent of the officials of the Public Schools Athletic League could be had to the game.

The Flushing team is one of the strongest in the metropolitan district, and has demonstrated its ability throughout the now closing scholastic season against the foremost teams of the greater city. It has been defeated only once, and has broken the local scholastic record for season's points, with a record of more than 300 points. If the game can be arranged, it will be played either at Ebbets Field or Washington Park, Brooklyn.

Football, Polo Grounds, Saturday, Nov. 24th 2 P. M. Camp Upton vs. Camp Devens. Tickets now on sale. New York Baseball Club, 200 Fifth Ave. $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, including war tax. —Advt.

BROWN POINTS FOR GREEN.

Record Monday Squad on Field as Drill for Dartmouth Starts.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 19.—Brown started out with a vengeance at Andrews Field this afternoon in preparation for the Dartmouth game. All three coaches kept the men hard at work, and practice was brought to a close only by the darkness. The squad is in the best shape since the beginning of the season, with Shaw and Gordon again getting into togs and running around the field. Both are somewhat weak, however, and the last half of the Dartmouth game may see Brown struggling along again without the services of the two backfield men. Weeks is the only regular on the hospital list. He has had a fractured ankle to nurse, but may be able to play in the grand finale next Saturday. Twenty-nine reported for today's workout, more than on any preceding Monday, a fact which shows the determination of the whole squad to do everything in their power to trim up their old rival, Dartmouth.

VIOLET ELEVEN AT WORK.

Team Has Long Signal Drill Preparing for Columbia.

Although the Stevens game Saturday was the hardest played this season by the New York University football team, Coach Wall held practice yesterday for both 'Varsity and freshman teams. It marked the beginning of the final week of intensive training for both teams. The freshman as well as the 'Varsity face a Columbia team this week. The freshmen play the Columbia first-year men on Ohio Field Friday, while the two 'Varsity teams meet Saturday.

The practice was strenuous in spite of its being only signal drill. The men came through the gruelling Stevens game in perfect condition. The regular lineup only was used, but one backfield candidate had a trial. He is Vasilyk, a back whose work for the last two weeks has attracted attention. His specialty is line smashing, and this characteristic coupled with a knowledge of Coach Wall's system, which he has learned during the last two weeks, makes him a factor to be reckoned with.

After the regulars had retired from the field Coach Wall kept the freshmen on the field and personally supervised their whole scheme of play. The freshmen are an important factor not only because of their game with the Columbia rookies, but also as they are expected to furnish the 'Varsity sufficient resistance in the scrimmages.

GLOOM IN CORNELL CAMP.

Eleven Badly Crippled as Preparations for Penn Game Begin.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 19.—No Cornell team in recent years ever faced the final drive for the Penn game under such discouraging conditions as the squad which gathered on the hill this afternoon to listen to Dr. Sharpe's comments on his observations of the Penn-Michigan battle. Were it not for the determination of the men to make one big rally for the battle with the Quakers, the situation would be one of despair, but the principal source of concern today was the physical condition of the first string men.

So many of them are below par physically that Dr. Sharpe may decide to make a pretty thorough reorganization of the team in order to have an at least physically fit eleven on Franklin Field a week from next Thursday. With so many injuries it has been impossible to get out of the team the drive that occasionally comes to the surface in mid-season. The Fordham game added to the coach's problems by placing a number of promising men on the injured list. The group includes Swanson, left guard, who sustained a broken rib; Thomas, second string quarter, broken ankle bone; Spiegelberg, right end, and S. Trowbridge, centre, turned ankle, and Nethercote, 'Varsity quarter, who was badly bruised. If Sharpe decides that it is useless to expect his regulars to return to form he may make a number of changes when active practice begins tomorrow.

FORDHAM SQUAD IS IDLE.

Maroon Shows Few Traces of Victorious Fray Against Cornell.

The Fordham football squad, following the order after the last two games, had a rest yesterday afternoon by Coach McCaffery. The players came through the Cornell game in fair shape and were somewhat jubilant over the decisive victory, which showed an improvement in the Maroon attack.

The next game on the schedule will be played Saturday with the Naval Reserves from Pelham Bay. The sailors lost to Fort Slocum by the score of 13 to 0 on Sunday. However, as they have made a later start than most of the naval teams, they should show better form when they meet the Bronxmen.

No game has thus far been secured for Thanksgiving Day, although negotiations are still being carried on by Manager Delehanty. Boston College, which has been doing well under Charlie Brickley's coaching, wired for a game in Boston, but the Fordham authorities are anxious to secure a home attraction for this date. Lehigh also offered to consider a game at South Bethlehem, but refused to play at Fordham Field.

RUTGERS SEEKS BIG GAME.

West Virginia Refuses to Play Another Contest in New York.

Special to The New York Times.

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Nov. 19.—A special representative of Rutgers College came to Morgantown today seeking to induce West Virginia University to play Rutgers at the New York Polo Grounds on Thanksgiving Day. The proposition had originally been made over the long distance telephone and was considered till late today, when it was finally turned down by West Virginia. It is probable that if the mountaineers add an extra game at all, it will be to Camp Shelby, at Hattiesburg, Miss., Dec. 8.

RUTGERS PRACTICE IN GYM.

Late Classes Force Sanford to Drill His Charges Indoors.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 19.—The Rutgers team came out of the contest with the League Island Marines on Saturday in good shape in spite of the fact that the game proved to be one of the hardest of the season. This afternoon the players were kept in classes until it was too late for work on the field, so Coach Sanford held practice in the gymnasium. The time was spent mainly in correcting minor errors brought out in Saturday's game and in smoothing out the team's offensive in preparation for the big battle with Cupid Black's Naval Reserves in Brooklyn.

MALTESE WILL BE SHOWN.

National Club to Hold Its First A. K. C. Exhibit Nov. 30.

The event will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel and a large number of prizes have been donated by members of the organization. It is expected that the largest number of dogs of the breed ever exhibited in this country will be seen. The judges are as follows: Dr. J. E. DeMund, Theodore Offerman and G. G. Hopton, referee. The entries will close today.

OLD GLORY SALE OPENS IN GARDEN

Bargain Prices Rule on First Day—Leaders of Harness World, Gather.

True to tradition, leaders of the trotting horse world gathered in Madison Square Garden yesterday for the opening of the annual Old Glory auction that will continue until nearly 600 horses are disposed of on Friday night. The axiom that early birds catch the worms was fulfilled, for, as has been the case in all recent years, there was little disposition to bid for the opening lots, and bargain prices ruled all through the afternoon and evening.

That did not prevent a large attendance of those faithful to the American trotter. Owners and drivers assembled for their annual reunion in the big town, talked over the noteworthy performances of the past season, and made trips to the stables in the basement to look over the many choice racing and breeding prospects that will be offered before the sale ends. Among the choice stallions, fresh from racetracks, included in the consignment are Ess H. Kay, which paced in 2:00¾; Bonington, 2:04¼, and Justice Brook, 2:08¼. Trotters with fast records made during the season include Al Mack, 2:05½; Pittsburg, 2:06¾, and Suldine, 2:06¼. The pacers also are a very speedy lot, and, in addition to Ess H. Kay, there will be offered Roan Hal, 2:00¾, and The Savoy, 2:02¼, which was the season's biggest money winner.

As usual on the opening day, the leading New York owners were present. Former Lieut. Governor Horace White and W. E. D. Stokes dropped in during the afternoon. The judicial side of the sport was represented by A. J. Keating, while noted drivers could be met at every step. Walter Cox came down from Dover, N. H., to replenish his stable, and Tommy Murphy was another looking for racing prospects for next season's campaign.

Sam Cating, whose occupation of training for the Russian nobility was put out of commission by the war, looked happy to be among his old associates, while the far reaching character of the crowd was evidenced by the appearance of E. R. Dunn, an enthusiast from San Francisco.

Cleveland sent a large contingent, including Captain David Shaw, Al. C. Pennock, George H. Tipling, Ted H. Kline, A. V. Ruthven, W. S. Lougee, W. R. Dunzeviler, and Mike McDevitt. Among the Pittsburgh men noticed were Sam A. Pickering, Robert McAfee, J. D. Gallery, Henry P. Haas, and John Thubrun. Connecticut sent Billy Crozier; Hartford, Henry Bruise; Windsor Locks, R. J. Lasbury, Broad Brook, and Billy Fleming of New Haven.

Paul Kuhn of Terre Haute, Ind., who on one of his trips here purchased The Harvester for $31,000, also is on hand and ready to pay big money for a similar stallion if one is offered. Others noticed were Herman Tyson, Titusville, Penn.; Howard Devine, manager of Walnut Hall Farm; George Sherman, Port Henry; Charles Valentine, Columbus, Ohio; Doc Charles Tanner, Curles Neck, Va.; Bob Nash and James Snell, Lexington, Ky., and H. B. Clark.

Prices ruled low, some horses with fairly respectable trotting lineage bringing as low as $45. A little enthusiasm was aroused late in the afternoon when the young mare Belle of the James was offered. This three-year-old daughter of Axworthy had shown good speed in trials and is in foal to The Harvester. She was knocked down at $380 to H. L. Handy of Springfield, Mass., and was considered a rare bargain. Others for which fair prices were realized were Host Peter, by Peter the Great, $310; Badon, by Bingara, $250, and Ruth B., by Delaware Boy, $240.

GIRL SWIMMERS TO RACE.

Match Contest Between 10-Year-Old and 11-Year-Old on Saturday.

Aileen Regan, 10 years old, and Helen Wainwright, 11 years old, the youngest members of the Women's Swimming League, will compete in a match race at the aquatic carnival to be held at the Winter Pool Saturday night. The distance agreed upon is forty yards, two laps of the pool. At the weekly practice meets of the swimming league the rivalry of the two youngsters has been decidedly marked, and the two youthful mermaids begged for a special match race and insisted that officials with starting guns and stop watches be appointed so the race would go down in the records as official.

In spite of the youth of the two girls, they are duly registered members of the Amateur Athletic League, and are on the same competitive standing as girls twice their ages, and they have even wanted to enter competition in open events against girls who have been in the limelight for their records and deeds in the water. The request for a match race was granted, and Saturday night's race will result in a juvenile champion.

Another event on the program will be between Charlotte Boyle, who gave National Champion Claire Galligan such a close race ten days ago, and Elizabeth Ryan of the First Regiment Swimming Team of Philadelphia, in a 100-yard match race. Miss Ryan is one of Philly's leading girl swimmers and in meeting Miss Boyle she has picked the best girl amphibian New York has produced this year.

TEAMS FOR TRAINING UNITS.

Yale Plans Swimming for Army and Navy Men Also.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 19.—Swimming at Yale will assume a new aspect this year owing to the situation created by the war. In addition to the regular university and freshman teams there will be teams of twelve men each, representing the various training units. Alumni have donated gold medals to be awarded to the winning teams, and it is expected that other insignia will be supplied for the squads finishing second and third.

Both the university team and freshman candidates have already begun practice in Carnegie pool. Forty-five men reported for the opening work, including the aspirants for the water polo team. According to The Yale News it is regarded that the university team, which will again be coached by Mathew Mann, has more than an even chance of winning its seventh consecutive championship. As a nucleus for the team Captain Mayer, Alexander, Adams, and Badger remain from last year's team, together with Hincks, Pryibil, Meagher, and Farrington of last year's freshman team.

Ogden Reid, 1904, Captain of the water polo team for two years, will coach this sport. Veterans of last year's team include Captain Adams, Bourne, Dexter, Hallowell, Stewart, Hendrickson, Many, and Parker.

The freshman schedule will include more meets than have been held for some years.

COLLIE SHOW ON DEC. 3.

New York Club to Hold Second Annual Exhibit at Bryant Hall.

The Collie Club of New York will hold its second annual American Kennel Club specialty show at Bryant Hall, Dec. 3. The entries for this event will close on Saturday. Every effort is being made to bring the best collies in the United States to the exhibit, and the officials expect an entry of 100 dogs. George W. Murdock of Philadelphia has been chosen to act as judge. Not a few trophies have been offered for the various classes to be won outright.

Fordham Prep Seeks Opponent.

The Fordham Prep football team is anxious to secure a game for next Saturday with any local high school or Prep eleven. The Maroon youngsters clash for the Catholic Prep School title with the Brooklyn Prep on Thanksgiving Day at Washington Park.

MAY COMPETE WITH PROS.

A. A. U. Passes Amendment Affecting Amateurs at Army Camps.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Nov. 19.—The Board of Control of the Amateur Athletic Union today adopted an amendment to the by-laws providing that amateurs may compete with professionals in athletic events at army encampments during the war. The board also approved an appropriation of $5,000 to promote championship meets at army cantonments. The board also decided to waive the registration fee for athletes in army cantonments.

A committee, consisting of Justice B. S. Weeks of New York, George Turner, and W. C. Prout, was appointed to confer with Secretary of War Baker as to the spending of the fund to encourage army athletics.

The board voted also to expend any sums in addition to the $5,000 deemed necessary to encourage athletics among the men in the national service. The board rejected an amendment offered by the Southern Pacific Association, which would abrogate the rule preventing basket ball players from competing for rival clubs in their district after they have deserted another club in that district.

It also rejected an amendment proposed by the Metropolitan Association providing that athletes engaged in playground activities during the Summer months might retain their amateur standing.

The board denied reinstatement to Paul Monaco, Schenectady, N. Y., and Leo J. Zielinski and A. J. Borgelt, both of Milwaukee, who competed against professionals.

Philadelphia was named as the city for the next annual meeting of the Amateur Athletic Union and Charles A. Dean of the Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago was named President of the organization. This was virtually a compromise between the East and the West. San Francisco and other Western cities had in bids for the next year meeting, while New York stayed out in favor of Philadelphia.

WEST SIDE LOSES LEADER.

Myrick to Retire as President of Tennis Club at Next Meeting.

Julian S. Myrick, President of the West Side Tennis Club, will not be a candidate for re-election when the annual meeting of the organization is held in January. Charles Scott Landers has been named by the nominating committee, consisting of Arthur T. Friedman, Kenneth M. Murchison, Edwin M. Leask, Charles Bishop and E. D. Hubbard, to succeed to the Presidency and there is little probability of a rival entering the field.

Mr. Myrick has been President for three terms, 1915, 1916, 1917 and was Vice President in 1913 and 1914. Under his leadership the West Side Club has become of national prominence in the game of tennis. It was largely due to his efforts that the Davis cup match, Australasia vs. United States, was held at the West Side grounds and he was also instrumental in having the national championships changed from Newport to Forest Hills. Mr. Landers, who is nominated to succeed him, played a large part in obtaining the city courts of the West Side Club at Amsterdam Avenue and Ninety-third Street, which were opened in 1915.

The full list of nominations is as follows: President, Charles Scott Landers; Vice President, Marshall S. Hagar; Treasurer, Hugh P. Guiler; Secretary, William Alexander Campbell; Captain, Dr. Theodore B. Barringer, Jr. Board of Governors, Class 1920; Julian S. Myrick, Richard H. Titherington, Robert W. Gifford, G. A. L. Dionne. Nominating Committee, 1918: Percy S. Hildreth, C. W. Kress, H. C. Worth, King Smith, R. B. Gatcomb.

Mr. Myrick is now Acting President of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association. George T. Adee, President of the association, is a Major in the reserve corps and will shortly go to France. It is expected that Mr. Adee will retire from the Presidency at the close of the present term and there is already talk to the effect that Mr. Myrick will succeed him as President when the annual meeting of the United States Lawn Tennis Association is held in February.

OUIMET OBTAINS LEAVE.

Will Pair with Guilford to Play in Fourball Match Here.

Having obtained permission from the athletic committee of Camp Devens, Private Francis Ouimet of the selective army will leave Boston on the midnight train Friday night and arrive in New York in plenty of time to take part in a fourball best ball golf exhibition of 36 holes over the Englewood Golf Club course Saturday. Ouimet will pair with his fellow townsman, Jesse Guilford, against Oswald Kirkby, metropolitan amateur champion, and John G. Anderson, Westchester amateur champion.

This match was to have been played last Saturday for the benefit of the athletic equipment fund of Camp Devens, but Ouimet was unable to get away. Jerome D. Travers took the place of Ouimet with Guilford but Kirkby and Anderson won the match. The first eighteen holes will be started at 9:30 and the second at 1:30. Anderson received a letter yesterday morning from the Camp Devens Athletic Committee assuring him that Ouimet would be on hand this time for the match.

BOTSFORD VICTOR ON LINKS.

Columbia's Tennis Star Wins Medal in University Golf Play.

Willard Botsford, Columbia 1920, who is tennis champion at the university, proved his versatility by winning the medal for the lowest net score in the Fall golf tournament for the championship of Columbia University. The young tennis crack, handicapped at 24, traversed the eighteen-hole course of the Fox Hills Golf Club with a gross score of 99. Using his handicap, this gave Botsford a net score of 75 and the medal in that event. A. L. Walker, Jr., '19, played at scratch, and easily won the championship, with the lowest gross score—a card of 79.

ENTRIES CLOSE TOMORROW.

N. Y. A. C. Extends Time for Its Amateur Boxing Tourney.

The officials of the New York Athletic Club announced last night that the date for the closing of entries for the Winged Foot organization's next amateur boxing show, which will be held on Thursday and Saturday nights, had been extended to tomorrow. This move was made so as to allow the pick of the local amateur ring men to enter for the competition. Originally the entries were to have closed yesterday. The tournament will be a benefit, the proceeds to be donated to the Soldiers' Library Fund.

This will be the first of a series of boxing nights which the club intends holding throughout the Winter months for the benefit of some war fund. Since the passing of the Frawley law, which also governed amateur boxing as well as professional boxing, the club has decided to omit the usual admission fee among the members, according to Matt Halpin of the Athletic Committee of the club. Instead, the members attending the bouts will be asked to subscribe to some of the various funds now going for the benefit of the soldiers.

The competition will be held in four classes, one of them being a novice division for boxers of 118 pounds or under who have never won a first or second prize at boxing. The other weights to be contested are 108, 125, and 135 pounds.

Smith-Fulton Bout Postponed.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 19.—Announcement was made here tonight that the ten-round bout between Gunboat Smith and Fred Fulton, scheduled for tomorrow night, has been postponed until next Monday night.

TRACK MARK FALLS AT BOWIE OPENING

Startling Clips Two-fifths of a Second Off Record for Six and One-Half Furlongs.

BOWIE, Md., Nov. 19.—Under perfect weather and track conditions that allowed the beating of one track record and the equaling of another the final race meet under the rules of The Jockey Club for the season of 1917 opened here this afternoon. Though the opening was delayed because of the necessity of appealing to the courts for a license the turfmen waited patiently from the closing day at Pimlico, and large fields testified to the popularity of the sport in this State.

H. C. Hallenbeck's Gold Tassel gave further evidence of the quality of this season's crop of two-year-olds by taking the Bowie Inaugural Handicap at a mile, which was the feature of the card. Gold Tassel, with Erickson in the saddle, kept close to the pace set by the Quincy Stable's Barry Shannon, and when called on in the stretch wore down the three-year-old to win by a small margin.

R. F. Carman's consistent sprinter, Startling, was responsible for the change in track record figures. In the absence of Leochares, Startling carried top weight in the race for the Hyde Park Purse at six and a half furlongs and gave away weight to a shiftly lot of sprinters. The distance just suited the son of Marta Santa, and with Butwell to guide him he was the favorite in the mutuels. Startling was well in hand all the way and at the finish had plenty to spare over J. Arthur's Water Lady. The time of 1:19 3-5 clipped two-fifths of a second from the previous record.

Orlando of Havana, which is owned by a Cuban sportsman, O. Yzquierdo, captured the Junior Purse for two-year-olds and was forced to equal the track record of 1:13 for six furlongs in order to defeat Fragonard, which with Butwell riding came fast at the finish and threatened to overhaul the leader. There were several upsets during the day, Startling and Tie Pin, which won the sixth race, being the only decided choices to score victories.

GLICK MAY LEAD HIS TEAM.

Ex-Princetonian Likely to Play Quarter Back for Camp Upton.

The New York public will have an opportunity to see a regiment of drafted men on parade next Saturday, when the football teams of Camp Upton and Camp Devens oppose each other on the Polo Grounds gridiron, following a military drill by a thousand picked men from the National Army cantonment at Yaphank, L. I. The training of the conscripted troops at this camp has progressed rapidly, and it will be a finely drilled body of men that will be on parade at the Harlem stadium for the inspection of the New Yorkers.

It is probable that the Camp Upton eleven will be run by Frank Glick, former Princeton star, who is coaching the team. Glick is experimenting with two or three players who are candidates for the position of quarterback on the soldier team, but it would not be surprising to see him at that post himself when his team lines up against the powerful team from Ayer.

Tickets for the game will be placed on sale today (Tuesday) at the offices of the New York National League Club at 200 Fifth Avenue.

COLUMBIA REGULARS BACK.

Cochran, Houlahan, and Rosen to Play Against N. Y. U.

After two days' rest the Columbia 'Varsity will start on its final week of practice for the game with New York University, in which all of the Blue and White regulars, including Cochran, Rosen, and Houlahan, will be physically able to play. These three men were out of the contest with Wesleyan on Saturday, but have recovered sufficiently from their injuries to make sure their return before this week is up.

The fact that Wesleyan defeated New York University—even if by a margin of only one point—is looked upon as a favorable omen by the supporters of Columbia, for with Cochran, Houlahan, and Rosen in the game, the Blue and White will stand a good chance to win over the Violet.

The Columbia freshmen are without the services of another of their regular backfield men. In the game with Wesleyan last Saturday Allen Mills, who has played all season at right half back, suffered a broken rib. De Fronzo, with two broken ribs, and Garrigus with a broken ankle, are the other men who will be unable to play against the New York University freshmen.

BILLIARDS TO HELP IN WAR.

Local Roomkeepers Organize to Raise $300,000 for Ambulance Fund

The first step in the effort of the billiard players of New York to raise $300,000 with which to purchase and equip ambulances for war service was taken last night at a meeting in Thum's Academy, when the New York auxiliary to the national body in charge of the movement was organized. John T. Doyle was chosen President of the New York branch, Joseph Thum Treasurer, and David Kreuter of the east side Secretary.

The meeting was attended by some thirty of the local owners from various parts of the metropolitan district, and, while the organization of the local branch was the biggest feature of the meeting, a number of suggestions were advanced by the owners as to the manner of obtaining the sum needed to make New York's quota. It was the general feeling that the objective of the national body should be $500,000 instead of the original $300,000, and there was plenty of confidence shown in the ability of those behind the movement to raise the first-named sum. The next meeting of the Fund Committee will be held at Thum's next Monday afternoon, when ways of raising the money will be formally devised and acted upon. An Executive Committee will be appointed at the next meeting.

DATES FOR STEVENS FIVE.

Ambitious Program Arranged for Engineers' Basket Ball Team.

The dates for the Stevens basket ball team, which have been issued by Manager Wiborn, include two out-of-town trips. Although the list of dates is not yet complete, the program promises to be a strenuous one.

The squad is working out every day in the Walker gymnasium at Castle Point, and the outlook for a speedy quintet is very bright. Captain Reisenburger has Horns, Hafnagle, and Daly working out with him at forward, while Oetting is at present practicing in the pivotal position. La Point and Gottlieb have been working as guards. With the close of the football season another big group of candidates will be available and the fight for positions on the 'Varsity will wax much warmer. Carlson is one of the many men who will come out for basket ball after he finishes his gridiron season. He is an excellent pivot man and will give Oetting a battle for that place.

An incomplete list of dates as announced is as follows:

Dec. 8, Drexel, at home; 14, Delaware, at home; 21, Drexel, away; 22, Temple, away; Jan. 5, Dartmouth, at home; 16, Temple, at home; 19, Rutgers, at home; 30, Conn. To Promote Road Race for Soldiers.

The Athletic Committee of the Morningside A. C. has decided to promote a scratch five-mile road race on Dec. 2 for athletes in the service of Uncle Sam. The officials expect to distribute about twenty individual prizes to the soldiers in addition to two team prizes. The Morningside Club is the first of the amateur organizations in the metropolitan district to promote a road race entirely for soldiers and they are looking forward to the event expectant of success.

Keogh Is Assigned to Yaphank.

The appointment of J. Franklyn Keogh, formerly of Syracuse University, as an army camp athletic director, was approved yesterday by Raymond B. Fosdick, Chairman of the War Department's Committee on Training Camp Activities. Keogh will take up his duties at Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I., as one of the directors of the athletic activities.

FAST RUNNERS ARE SCARCE.

Cornell Harriers Below Usual Standard This Year.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 19.—Cornell will enter a likely looking cross-country team in the intercollegiate meet next Saturday, although from the point of view of time made this Fall the harriers will fall below the standard set by Jack Moakley's teams in the past.

Captain I. C. Dresser is running in fine form, and his time has been equal or close to the best made by the great Cornell runners of the past. Spear is not as fast as Dresser, but he has been finishing a good distance ahead of his team mates. The only thing that is causing Jack Moakley to conclude that this year's bunch is quite below the normal standard is the big gap that exists between the first two men and the others. The usual uniform team strength of the Ithacans is lacking, and they won't send their men over the tape in Van Cortlandt Park so well bunched as they would under normal circumstances.

Although the team will not be chosen until the middle of next week, the showing made by the men in the trials indicates that, besides Dresser and Spear, Moakley will start Yost, Seelbach, Maynard, Croxton, Abbott, and Howe or Strong. Yost was a sub last year. The others are new men to 'Varsity squad running.

The Ithacans have won all but three cross country championship races since the meet was started in 1899. They are hopeful of maintaining and advancing this record.

Coach Moakley thinks that Penn will have to be reckoned with, and he is looking for some good teams from New England. There is no information on which to base any calculations, the Cornell men say, but they expect the meet to be interesting and well fought.

Mrs. Fiske in a "Biographical Comedy" of Multitudinous First Loves.

In his critical biography of George Sand, René Doumic points out that the Venetian escapade with Alfred de Musset, which the world of 1830, and especially the two principals in it, took so romantically and so seriously, was in reality the subject for a literary comedy such as Molière wrote in "Les Femmes Savantes." Molière, it may be remarked in passing, was what is currently known as an artist in "the legitimate."

Philip Moeller, who provided the present play for Mrs. Fiske, is also a distinguished dramatist, but hitherto his genre has been one-act burlesques, delightfully rendered by the Washington Square Players. In "Helena's Husband" he gave us Homeric high life reduced to modernistic vernacular, and in "A Roadhouse in Arden" he showed Shakespeare and Bacon plagiarizing from each other's conversation, and anticipating the jealousies and recriminations that have since distracted their respective partisans. "Madame Sand" presents this theme of Molièresque comedy in a similar vein of literary burlesque, thus affording Mrs. Fiske a vehicle for her very considerable talents in caricature.

It is possible that the enterprise proceeded from a fundamental misconception. In de Musset's case, certainly, the net result of the adventure in love was first to bruise and almost crush him, and then, in the course of time, to awaken him to a world of poetic feeling, of fantastic, lyric comedy, of which French literature has no parallel. Madame Sand also was immensely stimulated and enriched as an artist. To show this genuinely human and literary phase of the episode, however, would be to deal with the so-called legitimate.

Mr. Moeller has chosen to look upon the affair in terms of the strenuously bohemian life of Washington Square, with the shallow poses, the fatuous absurdities, and the eventual futility with which its denizens credit one another. And he has treated it in the vein of his Elizabethan and Homeric burlesques.

In one way, this is perhaps justifiable. Madame Sand had a full dozen of passionate affairs, ranging from de Musset and Chopin, who figure in the play before us, to Jules Sandeau, Prosper Merimée, and other gallants down the scale to a number of ridiculous nonentities. And she loved each, to quote Mr. Moeller's rubric, "as I have never loved before." When she cried out to Heine, between drinks, so to speak, that her heart was a grave, Heine replied, "Say rather a cemetery."

Yet George Sand and De Musset are neither anonymous villagers nor subjects of literesque myth. They are not folk, that is, who lightly lend themselves to burlesque. They are personalities of power and significance whose deeds and motives are known in the most exhaustive detail. To falsify them, with whatever amiable intention, is to commit a subtle but very real offense.

Mr. Moeller's play has another disability which is not at all subtle, but which, to the casual playgoer unversed in literary biography, will be painfully real. The methods and effects which, in his one-act plays, carried him breezily through pall when they are spread out over an entire evening. At the end of the first act it seemed that he and Mrs. Fiske had achieved a real success; but the second act, in itself rather better than the first, somehow palled, and the final act went down into the slough of despond. To put the case concretely, the first time one saw the literary lovers plagiarizing their own conversations it was funny; the second time it was only amusing, and the third time it fell flat.

In a modest and frank curtain speech Mr. Moeller credited Mrs. Fiske with all that was best in the evening. That was a true word. There are many bright lines and amusing bits of comedy, but they gained their best effect by her vivid and salient comedy method. Her lovemaking with de Musset, Pagello, and Chopin successively was admirably intense, and no less admirably stereotyped. She wore her pantalettes of the first act with the effect of costume comedy, and her trousers of the second act with delightful aplomb. She even smoked a black cigar as if it were the breath of life to her.

Her line to De Musset's mother, "I am at once your son's mistress and his mother," evoked hearty laughter. That was the keynote of the character, as far as it had any such thing. There is no touch of vulgarity in the successive affairs of this polyandrous amazon, this rapid-fire amorist. But, by the same token, there is no touch of recognizable human nature.

The multitudes of George Sand's biographers have as yet failed to establish her as an intelligible human being. She is an unreduced paradox, a sphinx alike in literary genius and in human conduct. In a genuine comedy she would be interesting, intriguing, if incomprehensible. In burlesque she is ultimately baffling and insignificant. It is probably beyond the power of any actress to render her viable on the stage.

José Ruben, late of the Washington Square Players, made a striking figure as de Musset, as did John Davidson in the part of Dr. Pagello. The Chopin of Alfred Cross and the Liszt of Owen Meech were commendable lay figures of genius. As Heine, Ferdinand Gottschalk had the best part among this galaxy of celebrities and was genuinely amusing as always.

The three scenes of Rollo Peters were in admirable taste, and contributed a much needed effect of atmosphere.

TWO PIANISTS' RECITALS.

Yolanda Mero and Wynne Pyle Appear in Aeolian Hall.

Yolanda Mero, a rare pianist, since she is one of the few heard rarely, though now in her prime, opened her matinée in Aeolian Hall yesterday with an "organ" concerto of Friedemann Bach, arranged by August Stradal. The composer was as far from the glorious sun of Johann Sebastian as his adapter was from the blazing fireworks of Liszt, but the odd choice served for variety. The player added Schumann's "Davidsbundler" dances, two bits of Debussy delightfully done, a serenade of Rachmaninoff, and a rhapsody of Dohnanyi. She also gave her own version of a waltz by Merkler, very much as the late Teresa Carreno, whom the radiant Miss Mero oddly recalled yesterday, used so proudly to play her little "Teresita Waltzes" to a public that acclaimed her "Valkyr of the piano." There were concluding numbers of Liszt.

Wynne Pyle, dark, comely, statuesque, gave last evening's Aeolian piano recital, playing twelve preludes of Scriabine, of interest to musicians, and, almost equally unfamiliar, some little "German Waltzes" of Beethoven. She, too, added imposing technical arrangements, a Gluck melody done by Sgambati, a Cesar Franck prelude, fugue and variations, scored by Bauer, as well as Paderewski's "Theme Varié," Schumann's toccata, Brahms's F sharp minor caprice, some Chopin and Liszt. Miss Pyle's unusual program attracted a large audience, and her playing won applause.

MME. FARRAR SINGS TOSCA.

At the first performance of Puccini's "Tosca" last evening at the Metropolitan Opera House Riccardo Martin was to make his reappearance there after to make his reappearance after his absence from the company, but on not notified to the management in time to make the change upon the house bill, not in fact till late in the afternoon, his place was taken by Mr. Martinelli. As he has to sing in Philadelphia tonight, his performances are brought pretty near together for an operatic artist.

The only new features of the performance were the conducting of Mr. Moranzoni and the new scenery for the first and second acts from Milan. Mr. Moranzoni's conducting was excellent. It showed a good knowledge of the score, an appreciation of its dramatic effects sometimes a little violent, but the dramatic effects are violent. The new settings are not important additions to the scenic art gallery of the Metropolitan.

Mme. Farrar's Tosca is now one of her familiar interpretations, one for which she is well fitted by her dramatic style, and which she presents with skill and fine vocal effect. Mr. Martinelli sang as Cavaradossi a good deal by main strength. Mr. Scotti's Scarpia was an admirable exemplification of an impersonation that has become a classic.

ELSIE JANIS'S IMITATIONS.

She Adds Ina Claire at the Palace—Hyams and McIntyre.

Elsie Janis, who remains at the Palace for a second week before departing for foreign shores, yesterday added to her gallery of stage portraits a highly successful impersonation of Ina Claire in "Polly With a Past." She also revived the Cockney of Laurette Taylor an impersonation which suffered considerably in comparison with the imitation of Miss Claire, who probably will presently find herself in Miss Janis's permanent collection.

Vlasta Maslova returns with a Russian named Kaeshinsky to offer some unusually interesting Russian dancing, and the graceful Leila McIntyre, with a note in her voice which persistently recalls Irene Franklin, comes out of the provinces to sing and dance again with Johnny Hyams. Felix Adler, offering some familiar, but amusing nonsense, is also on the program.

FRITZ KREISLER WELCOMED.

Violinist Never Played Better Than in His Brooklyn Recital.

Fritz Kreisler gave a violin recital at the Brooklyn Academy last evening, attended by an audience not so large as welcomed him from the war two years ago, but one plainly desirous to give royal greetings, which it did in prolonged applause as he walked on the stage.

Mr. Kreisler has $100,000 of concerts booked in many cities, all since America entered the European conflict, and under the President's proclamation that artists and other go on with peaceful pursuits while obeying our laws he is proceeding to fill these engagements.

He never played better than last night, when his program included a sonata of the Italian, Tartini, a concerto of the Belgian, Vieuxtemps, and pieces by the American, Edwin Grasse, with others of Bach, Beethoven, Smetana, and Kreisler.

Mr. Bonnet Plays Bach.

Joseph Bonnet, the French organist, continued his interesting series of historical organ recitals yesterday in the Hotel Astor ballroom with a program devoted entirely to Johann Sebastian Bach. There were on the program four choral preludes, the G major and D major prelude and fugue, the D minor trio sonata, and the passacaglia and fugue in C minor. It was a "stiff" program, yet it was easier to enjoy than the first one of the seires, devoted to Bach's forerunners. There was a large audience present that listened closely and applauded liberally. Mr. Bonnet's third program will be devoted to Handel, Mozart, and masters of the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries.

A SPARKLING HIT IS 'ODDS AND ENDS'

Melody, Humor, and New Ideas in Dudley-Godfrey-Byrnes Revue of 1917.

WATSON'S ANTICS AMUSE

Jack Norworth, Lillian Lorraine, and Jack Edwards Contribute to the Merry Flow.

ODDS AND ENDS OF 1917, a revue in two parts. Book and lyrics by Bide Dudley and John Godfrey; music by James Byrnes. At the Bijou Theatre.
PRINCIPALS.—Jack Norworth, Lillian Lorraine, Harry Watson, Joseph Herbert, Jr., Georgia Manatt, Jack Edwards, Laura Hamilton, Paul Frawley, Maxine Brown, Joseph Madden, John Birch, Lolo Hilten, Upert Carlton, and Marjorie Poir.

An intimate revue fashioned after the patternless pattern of "Hitchy-Koo," and which, if anything, improves upon the model; an entertainment which possesses tunefulness, humor, sparkle, smartness, and more real ideas than it is customary to find in a dozen musical shows—this is "Odds and Ends of 1917," which had its first performance hereabouts last night at the Bijou Theatre. In addition, the new piece has a capital low comedian in the person of Harry Watson, triumphantly rescued from the movies, an entertaining and personable pair in Jack Norworth and Lillian Lorraine, and a chorus fully as attractive as any now treading the metropolitan boards. In other words, "Odds and Ends of 1917" is distinctly a hit.

The new revue passes beyond mere intimacy—the program takes refuge in the word chummy. Early in the entertainment one feared that too much reliance was to be placed on this quality of familiarity, but it speedily became evident that such was not the case. The introduction of a hilarious satire on the aquatic acts so dear to the heart of vaudeville, with Harry Watson setting the pace as the dignified announcer, marked the real beginning of the entertainment. Thereafter there followed further proofs of the pains taken by the authors to provide an entertainment with some degree of appeal to the intelligence. A first-act finale, for example, introduced the famous couples of history, from Queen Elizabeth and Christopher Columbus down to the Brothers Smith of cough-drop fame.

Throughout the evening the irrepressible Watson was much in evidence. In the opening act he contributed to the general merriment by appearing as a prize fighter, thereby reviving a characterization which served him well in the old "Follies" days—either 1907 or 1908. An impersonation of nearly famous men was another amusing satire, and he put a vast amount of life into a telephone mix-up which would have been considerably less humorous without him.

Jack Norworth, in view of the fact that he is one of the managers of the attraction, was not in evidence so much as might have been expected. His portions of the entertainment were truly odds and ends, some of them new and others carried over from the old days. The best of his numbers was a song entitled "Hector," which served to recall how matters have changed since Hector was a pup. In the rendition of this he was assisted by Lillian Lorraine, another old favorite, who returned after a considerable absence and acquitted herself gracefully.

A newcomer, named Jack Edwards, also distinguished himself, both as dancer and comedian, and various others did their respective bits capably. The entertainment as a whole, of course, is not without its weak spots here and there. A trench scene could be elided without being missed; a number which dips into the old-fashioned songs has been somewhat anticipated by the revues already on the boards, and the introduction of the chorus girls to the audience, soon after the curtain arises, also could be spared. But, for all that, "Odds and Ends of 1917" is a winner.

Need Volunteer Life Savers.

Commodore Charles E. Raynor of the United States Volunteer Life-Saving Corps issued a call for volunteers yesterday. Applications to join may be made at the headquarters of the corps in the Municipal Building. More than 600 members of the corps attached to the stations along the waterfront of New York City and vicinity have joined the military and naval forces.

LLOYD GEORGE'S SPEECH.

When Mr. LLOYD GEORGE told the House of Commons yesterday that so far as he could judge American sentiment it would prefer a War Council with executive authority, he defined American sentiment exactly. He says there are reasons why that would be undesirable until the more moderate scheme he proposes has been proved inadequate, and with that understanding we shall no doubt waive our preference for the time. But we do not waive for a moment our preference, our demand, that there shall be at least such a War Council as he proposes, a council for the purpose of coordinating information and military movements. Our position in the war gives us a right to make this demand. The President has made it, and has plainly intimated that all our power is behind it. He has gone further and directed Colonel HOUSE to begin the necessary steps for bringing it about.

Furthermore, in this we stand with France. So much Mr. LLOYD GEORGE revealed yesterday. Both nations wanted not only a War Council but one with more power than Mr. GEORGE proposes. Who stands in the way of a War Council? Not England. England, we shall find, is behind LLOYD GEORGE. What tried to stand in the way was a group of politicians who thought they saw a chance to score against the Premier by raising what they mistakenly thought was a popular cry. It is simply unthinkable that this minority should block the way to the necessary reform which Lord KITCHENER proposed in 1915, which Mr. GEORGE proposes now, and which, if it had been adopted in time, would have saved Serbia, if not Rumania and Italy.

Mr. GEORGE hints that Italy's danger was foreseen by Sir WILLIAM ROBERTSON, the head of the British General Staff, but that the lack of a War Council prevented him from being able to enforce his recommendations for warding it off. The case for a War Council was complete without that crowning revelation. The political, partisan, and personal objections to it must not be permitted to weigh for a moment against the pressing need which was so convincingly expounded by the Premier in his speech. He said that he had America, France, Italy, and England with him, and he has.

There have been only two things, he says, that he really feared. One was defeat through lack of unity and the other was defeat by the submarine. "Of the submarine I have no longer any fear," he says, and this is a thrilling message. When he couples with that flat-footed declaration the fact that five submarines were sunk on Saturday alone he hints strongly that the failure of ruthlessness in the last two weeks has not been due to German discouragement, but to the increase of allied efficiency in coping with it, and in that result we can all take unmixed pride. The other menace remains. The efficiency which has routed the submarine must be brought into play against it, too. In his earnest and sensible endeavors toward that end Mr. GEORGE has the unstinted support of the United States, whose only fear is that he does not go far enough.

JAPAN'S SHIPS AND OUR STEEL.

Washington dispatches this morning cause doubt as to the correctness of the announcement in Tokio that negotiations with our Government concerning American ship steel and Japanese ships had been broken off. Neither the State Department nor the Japanese Embassy has heard of it. Nothing had served to interrupt the negotiations, an agreement having been delayed only by differing views about prices. Since the beginning of the war, Japan has been buying in this country the steel for her shipbuilders. Her unfilled orders here before our embargo on such steel became effective were for 400,000 tons. For lack of this material, several of her shipyards have recently been idle. It is understood that in the negotiations she asked for 300,000 tons and offered in return to permit the chartering of a number of ships by our Government, which preferred to buy them. Japan consented to sell, and it is provided by the terms of the pending agreement that our Government shall take 300,000 tons of ships, while Japan shall receive 100,000 tons of plates, paying the same price, $65 a ton, that is paid by our Navy Department, although plates were sold to her at twice and even three times that rate before we entered the war. On the other hand, our Government proposed to pay about $175 a ton for the ships, or a little more than $50,000,000. Japan wanted a higher price, because there is a market at her ports for ships at $300, and sales have been made at more than $400. Here has been the cause of delay.

The Department of Communications at Tokio will find it difficult to prove that the withdrawal of 300,000 tons of ships would "virtually destroy" Japan's European trade or "infringe "upon the necessities of her national "existence." Her merchant marine has grown enormously during the war, with an accompanying very large increase of her foreign trade. Ship companies and builders have been stimulated by subsidies. The sale of 300,000 tons would leave enough for her necessities and her new trade. And new ships will be coming from her yards. Many have thought that her great merchant marine was not sufficiently engaged in war service. It has done in Eastern waters, however, some work which Great Britain was forced to neglect, and has sent ships to the Atlantic and Mediterranean. We hope the negotiations will soon end in agreement, and that this will not be prevented by a difference about ship tonnage prices, unless Japan demands a rate which is clearly unreasonable. Some weight must be given to the prices for which sales can easily be made. Work in Japan's yards should be resumed. The plates are required in part for ships ordered by Great Britain and France, and these would go into war service. There should be the most friendly co-operation of Japan with the United States in the use of ships. We are taking ships for war from our coast and lake trade. All that Japan can spare are needed on both oceans.

THE WAR AND SOME STREETS.

Since no New Yorker, however ancient, can remember a time when some of the streets of New York were not extensively torn up, obstructed, impassable, there will be a large area of incredulity, cynical, no doubt, as to the defense that the war that covers a multitude of sins of omission is responsible for the ruins and the débris, the relics, heaven knows how many years old, of the disembowelment of the town for the new subway system. Seventh Avenue, whose title to first honor for what the Gazetteers call "an undulating and diversified surface" we are prepared to maintain even against the champions of Broadway, looks like a relief map of the aftermath of the Ice Age, coupled with a stretch of the devastated district in Northern France. It is littered, cluttered up, humped up, shell-holed, cratered, trenched, pillboxed, toolboxed, sand-duned, bouldered, miscellaneously and multitudinously bestrewn with rubbish. It is not a road or a street. It is an impasse. It is such a devil's dance and phantasmagoria of an avenue as a Gargantuan welsh rabbit composed of roc's eggs, Limburger, and stingo might make a lunatic see in nightmare.

We learn from THE NEW YORK TIMES that the Public Service Commission says it keeps 1,500 men "alert to prevent needless street obstruction." Has anybody seen 1,500 men, carrying long staffs, guided by dogs, and wearing the legend "I am blind"?

LIBERTY BOND VALUES AND PRICES.

"Liberty 2d 4s" sold at 97 yesterday, and Liberty 3½s at 99.80, using the extreme quotations. Why should the bond of lower interest rate sell 2.80 points above the bond of higher interest rate? It must be doubted that anybody is capable of thinking that the "2d 4s" are second in any respect other than the order of issue. Only those capable of thinking that there are grades of Government credit will be either surprised or regretful at the comparison of quotations. Others will welcome the proof that some foolish ideas about our Government credit are suffering in the test of the market.

The notion that there is anything sacred about par for Government bonds is naively American, dating from the time when the holders of American bonds numbered about a quarter million. The fact is that no Government bonds can sell at par except temporarily and by accident. The quotations for governments will vary with the quotations for all other credits. All credits are estimated at their value in money, and vary from time to time, according to the factors of valuation of the moment. When the tax outlook is disturbed, the tax exemption factor has a disproportionate weight. That sufficiently explains the valuation of the 3½s. In that respect they have a monopoly valuation. When there is an oversupply of anything, its price suffers. That explains why the price of the 4s yielded.

Some evidently subscribed for more than they wanted to keep, and they sold out without awaiting the rise in price which may be expected if there should be a later issue at a higher rate, with the 4s exchangeable therefor. In that respect the 3½s are superior. Their rights of exchange, or conversion into later higher rate issues, are fixed by law, and are as broad as can be given. The later issues depend for their conversion rates upon the rules of the Treasury, and are already limited to the next succeeding issue. The 4s cannot jump an issue and take the highest rate which can be had before Germany is smashed. They must take the next terms the Treasury gives.

Both issues are at a discount only from a nominal par. There is no absolute par, there being as many prices for Government bonds as there are issues of all nations. If it were possible to name a par for Government credit, it would be found that both the 3½s and 4s are at a premium. They are the highest priced Government bonds in any market, and long will be so. So far as there is a standard or par, their price is it. It is the custom to issue Government bonds at a discount, for it is cheaper than to fix a rate which shall always command a premium. The limit of the discount is now so small as to show that no great harm has been done. Rather the discount is useful as tending to show what the worth of our Government credit is, and to indicate the discount at which future bonds might be issued, if it were recognized that it is better to issue in that manner than to raise the rate too much.

HOW KERENSKY FELL.

The mysterious week in Russia is rapidly losing its mystery. When the Bolsheviki deposed KERENSKY, he fled and appealed to the army. Most of it was apathetic or hostile, but he raised 1,500 men and marched on Petrograd. The report of his advance, spread and magnified, induced a handful of military cadets to try, in a moment of ecstatic enthusiasm, to overthrow the Bolsheviki before he could get there. They were surrounded, shot to pieces, and captured. The whole thing was a mere street row, which never even approached the dignity of the barricade fighting in Paris on former occasions. At the same time a similar aimless and unnecessary riot broke out in Moscow, with much more disastrous results for thousands of innocent people, since the rival mobs fired at long range and without aim, like the Mexicans in the targetless fighting that preceded the overthrow of MADERO.

Meanwhile KERENSKY marched happily toward Petrograd, where the Bolsheviki were in a panic—the panic being attested by the wild proclamations of TROTZKY and MOURAVIEFF. They hurriedly collected a miscellaneous mob of 16,000 and sent it against KERENSKY'S 1,500. In this amateur army of theirs were some soldiers, a good many sailors, but the great majority were factory hands and boys, frantically and feverishly armed by the Bolsheviki and decorated with the bloodthirsty title of "the Red Guard." This assemblage marched against KERENSKY in a condition bordering on panic—the proof of which is again to be found in the Bolsheviki proclamations after the event.

The two forces, the Bolsheviki mob and KERENSKY'S Cossacks, met at Gatchina. Most certainly MOURAVIEFF, the Bolsheviki commander, expected his men to cut and run as soon as the dreaded Cossacks charged—this is proved by the delirium of joy in which he and TROTZKY were thrown when it did not happen. The Cossacks, officers and men alike, were disgusted with their leader and their task and growing more and more disgusted every minute. They confronted the Red Guard for two days, occasionally firing aimless volleys, and finally made a sullen and apathetic charge. They did not get near enough to the Red Guard for a hand-to-hand encounter, as is demonstrated by the Bolsheviki report of the so-called "battle," in which occurs the amusing boast that the Cossacks were dismayed to see so many of their horses "toppled over."

General KRASNOFF, the Cossack leader, now decided that this nonsense had gone far enough. His men were in unanimous agreement with him that KERENSKY was nothing to fight for. He and they were making arrangements to turn the Premier over to the Red Guard and go home when KERENSKY discovered what was up, and, after demanding the truth and learning the worst from KRASNOFF, he agreed to submit to arrest. But while KRASNOFF was tranquilly preparing an "escort" to hand him over to MOURAVIEFF, KERENSKY escaped and disappeared.

MOURAVIEFF had telegraphed his "victory" to Petrograd, and TROTZKY had gone into transports of relief and gratitude and issued his proclamation describing it as a night that would live in history. MOURAVIEFF, however, was not yet aware of the state of feeling among KRASNOFF'S men, and he had followed up his "victory" by a retreat. Undoubtedly the Red Guard were still frightened at the name of the Cossacks. From his new position MOURAVIEFF grandiloquently announced that he had taken a strong "defensive" post and was able to "resist ten times KERENSKY'S force"; that is, that his victorious 16,000 could "resist" KERENSKY'S 1,500 even if multiplied to 15,000. Suddenly he, too, was thrown into ecstasies of relief by the news that KRASNOFF was about to surrender KERENSKY to him, and that the great campaign was over.

In Petrograd, meanwhile, the Bolsheviki, having taken the reins of government, did not know what to do with them. After issuing their summons to the nations of the earth to stop fighting for the Winter, they did not move a wheel. The employés in the Government offices refused to hear their orders, and after a few ineffectual attempts the Bolsheviki "Ministry" gave it up and went home, leaving the offices to run themselves, which they are now doing in some cases. In others they are closed up and the office staff is enjoying a holiday. In those offices which choose to go on running, the old officials are conducting business, but directing it themselves and treating the Bolsheviki with silent, or sometimes noisy, contempt.

Why did the Bolsheviki have to send the raw Red Guard against KERENSKY'S Cossacks? Obviously because they could not get soldiers to go. Why did KERENSKY raise only 1,500 Cossacks? Because, obviously, no more would go, and those who did immediately repented of their bargain. Evidently the soldiers will fight neither for KERENSKY nor for the Bolsheviki. The Russian tragedy, for a week, has taken on the color of farce. But only in Petrograd and the country round about; all this time something has been going on in the south of Russia which is neither tragic nor farcical, but serious and probably important. Only the most shadowy, flimsy hints of what it is have come out; but they encourage the hope that the good sense of the Russian people has at last been invoked against both Kerenskyism and Bolshevikism. The news of KALEDINES'S seizure of the coal fields is the best that has come out of Russia in many a month.

ENGLAND'S LOSS.

It is the irony of fate that death claims Sir STANLEY MAUDE, the British commander in Mesopotamia, when he seemed to be immune from the mischances of battle and safe from the stealthy assaults of one of the worst climates in the world. The British medical service at Bagdad is now most efficient and does not lack for supplies, so that the commander of the forces could count on the best of care if his health should be affected. The campaign which restored the prestige of British arms in the East was finished; at least active operations would not be necessary unless the Germans organized a great army to dispute the ascendency of the British. Temporarily, General MAUDE was ruler of Bagdad.

It seems only the other day that General MAUDE issued his proclamation in which he reminded the people of Bagdad that "for twenty-six generations" they had "suffered under "strange tyrants who have endeavored to set one Arab house against "another," and called upon them to take part in the management of their civil affairs "in collaboration with "the political representatives of Great "Britain who accompany the British "Army." And now, at the height of his fame, when the field of usefulness was opening more and more to him, this brilliant commander is lost to Great Britain. Perhaps in one of his able lieutenants, Lieut. Gen. W. R. MARSHALL or Lieut. Gen. A. S. COBBE, a worthy successor can be found, but MAUDE was regarded as indispensable. He had won the affection as well as the confidence of his troops. More popular than KITCHENER, he was as scientific in his methods, as thorough, and as uniformly successful. Sir STANLEY MAUDE promised to be a greater soldier. It is no reflection upon the merits of K. of K. to assert that the Mesopotamian campaign was a more difficult business than ever fell to him.

But in appraising the deserts of General MAUDE, it must be borne in mind that when he took over the command of the mixed British forces from Sir PERCY LAKE, they were a newly organized and admirably equipped army, with river communications down the Tigris to the Persian Gulf that left almost nothing to be desired. Furthermore, railroads had been laid in the desert up from Basra. TOWNSHEND, who waited vainly for relief at Kut, never had good tools to work with. The equipment of his small force was a reproach to the Indian Office, and in the end there was a great scandal. No matter what gallantry the rank and file displayed, TOWNSHEND was doomed to failure.

When MAUDE succeeded that accomplished organizer Sir PERCY LAKE, the British Army had been increased to 150,000 men, and it was served by an aviation corps that could detect the slightest move of the Turks and join in attacks upon them with an inexhaustible supply of bombs. At the same time, the sinuosities of the Tigris gave the Turks no mean advantage, and in their intrenchments they fought as stubbornly as OSMAN Pasha's men had done at Plevna. An incompetent or a temporizing commander would have failed in MAUDE'S place. But he was most versatile in attack and never gave the enemy any rest. With him it was one feint after another and a grand assault where one was least expected. The strategy of MAUDE in the Mesopotamian campaign will always be a delight to the student of wars. He was never at fault nor had a wasted moment. When he could bring the naval flotilla up the Tigris, after the Turks were routed out of Kut, they were always kept on the run and could never make a real stand.

In the death of Sir STANLEY MAUDE the British have lost a master strategist and there will be no sorrow in Berlin.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Seemingly No Law Was Broken.

There is difficulty, at present, anyhow, in seeing in the astonishing and deplorable balance sheet of the Army and Navy Bazaar anything to supply the District Attorney with a basis for action as a prosecuting officer. There is much in it, however, to interest him as a patriotic American, eager, like everybody else in the same class, to do what he can for the benefit of the country's defenders and to protect the general public from the ruthless exploitation of its generosity and its power to give.

But there is an obvious element of deception in holding a fair or entertainment of which the widely heralded purpose is to raise money for a cause that appeals strongly to the good citizen's heart, and then to use, of the funds thus obtained, only a minute part for carrying out that purpose. Certainly if the people who went to the Army and Navy Bazaar had known that only about 1 per cent. of what they spent there would go to the soldiers and sailors in the form of "comfort kits," their purchases and their contributions of various sorts would have been small indeed. They did not attend for the sake of paying huge commissions to agents and managers, and the fact that they were going to do so was carefully and wisely concealed from them—wisely, that is, from the standpoint of those who were to profit, and did profit, from what the assorted agents and managers presumably call "honest graft."

The District Attorney, apparently realizing that the kind of deception used was a suppression of the truth, merely, and not quite illegal as the law now stands, is quoted as intending to secure the passage of legislation to prevent or penalize similar manifestations of enterprise in the future. That he succeed in doing so is earnestly to be wished, but the chances are that for some time to come the New York public, without the aid of any new statute, will be able adequately to protect itself from wasting its money as it did at this particular bazaar.

That in consequence other and worthier efforts to raise money will be viewed with undeserved suspicion is to be regretted, but it is inevitable, and is, perhaps, the worst feature of the whole miserable episode.

Not Like a Boy's Production.

Nobody who reads with any care the letter to President WILSON that figures in the charges of disloyalty which have been brought against certain teachers in the De Witt Clinton High School will be able to avoid the suspicion that it was not written by the boy of 14 who turned it in as a "composition."

Of course, it would not be safe to say that no boy of that age could have written the letter, but its offensiveness is of a kind not characteristic of youth, and the general tenor of its sentences is of a sort that more than hints the labor of an older mind, long wonted to the use of sarcasm as a weapon in debate.

The letter somehow is a reminder of the fact that when, several years ago, THE TIMES offered a prize to pupils in the public schools for the best essay on ABRAHAM LINCOLN, there came in among the many received one that was accompanied by a note honestly confessing that the writer of it had "a little help from mother." If equally conscientious, it may be that the author of this particularly vicious product of "English" as it is taught at the De Witt Clinton High School would have confessed to having had a little help from father, or even to having had a lot of it.

If this theory be correct, the intention presumably was to bring to bear where it would be effective propaganda helpful to the Socialists, to Germany, or to the sort of pacifism that is helpful to both. The letter read strangely like the speeches delivered by excited soap-box orators when they choose to be bitterly humorous instead of fiercely indignant, and it had a good many of the peculiarities of misstatement and exaggeration to be noted in the utterances of men who are making an effort to earn the money which, if all reports be even half true, can be obtained by almost anybody here who is willing to do a little work for the Kaiser.

Saving Coal and Daylight.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Dr. Harry A. Garfield, Fuel Administrator, estimates that the coal shortage of the country will be 50,000,000 tons for the calendar year. Increase in production will be 50,000,000 over 1916, but the demand has increased 100,000,000 tons.

We are neglecting one means of conserving fuel that has been used by European countries not only without sacrifice of comfort, but by adding to it, and that is the daylight saving scheme of putting the clock forward one hour during the Summer months. We might even go further than they and set it forward all the year round. It would be a convenience and an economy to many people to have longer afternoons in Winter, and would be especially desirable for children, as it would give them more time to play out in the open air after being released from school.

Probably less than half of the population is out of bed at 6:30 Winter mornings, while afternoons everybody uses artificial light shortly after 4 o'clock. As our clocks are 23 to 24 minutes behind the time on the sun dial in midwinter we would not, if we adopted the scheme, be so very much more in advance of the sun than we now are behind it. This would seem to be a practical and easy method of conserving fuel.

Distorted minds—I mean upon the whole—
Make SHE folk crave and scramble for a goal
Which they should be content to leave for HES,
Content, as SHES have reached the plane of soul,
To cultivate that spirit part
So high above the mere man mate,
Whose brain and brawn are all—save heart—
That TIME has reckoned for his fate.

A gentle lady's hint as she pours tea
Becomes a law right then with any HE Who hears. He strives to please the little wren
When camouflaged with domesticity.
Man wants her sweet—to idolize:
He really cannot love a picket,
Demanding what WE realize
Might hurt, not help—the voter's

We wiser ones beguile our silly men—
We ivy around the HE, as oak—
Wield power born of woman's intuition,
That HES delight in and it makes a

Too fine and strong to ever irk
Or get his fretful Capricornus.
He pays our bills and hikes to work
To get more things to hang Upornus.

"THE GOOD GERMAN PEOPLE"

How It Has Come About That They Support the Evil Policy of Their Government.

By MRS. ST. CLAIRE STOBART.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my letter to THE NEW YORK TIMES of the 14th inst. I mentioned that German rule in conquered lands means literally hell on earth. I have since been asked if this is not exaggeration, for it seems that many in this country as well as in the Old Country find it difficult to believe that German men and women of culture and refinement, such as those with whom they were in old days at school or college, could possibly acquiesce in the acts of atrocity which make German rule a hell on earth. It is absurd, they say, to hold the good German people responsible for deeds which—even if they were committed—could never have been sanctioned by the will of the people. In other words the German Government is so unrepresentative of the German people that it can do evil things while the people will them to do good things. A combination of wicked Government and weak people which in any case needs the attention of the civilized world!

But for those who know from personal experience that atrocities unheard of even in Old Testament history have been and are being committed every hour of the German day, which is more than twenty-four hours long, it is obvious that no Government could have committed the atrocities which the German Government has committed, or won the victories which it has won, unless it had the whole-hearted support of the people behind it.

But who could have believed that the good, sensible German people were taking seriously, as part of a new gospel, teachings like those of H. S. Chamberlain with regard to the German language: "No duty is more urgent than that of forcing the German language upon the world." "I have no more sacred conviction than this, that the higher Kultur of humanity depends upon the spreading of the German language." "If Montaigne were living today he would have to remain silent—or to learn German." "Men must come to realize that whoever cannot speak German is a pariah."

But when in August, 1914, I was arrested by the Germans as a spy, in Belgium, and condemned to be shot within twenty-four hours, there was with me, in addition to my husband, who was going to be treasurer to my hospital unit, a vicar of the Church of England, who was to be chaplain to the unit. He knew no German and had not understood the Major Commandant's sentence of death, but he realized that the situation was serious. We had been allowed no food for two days, his throat was parched, and he asked me to ask for a drink of water. The Devil Major, as we called him, immediately said roughly, "What's he saying?" I replied that my friend was only asking for a drink of water. "Then tell him he must ask in German." "But, mein Herr Major, he doesn't know any German." "Then he must learn German; every one must speak German now." He then went up to the chaplain, who was dressed in an army chaplain's uniform, put his face close to the vicar's and in insulting tone shouted, "Now then, say it after me: 'Was-ser trin-ken, was-ser trin-ken.'" I whispered to the vicar to comply and he spoke the first, and from what I know of him the only, German words that are ever likely to pass his lips—and he was then given a drink of water—from a horse pail.

Except from personal experience it is only possible to believe these things and to understand how it is that the good German people have run amuck in this amazing fashion, if we realize a simple truth which is often unperceived. Now, we all know that there are good people and bad people; good ideas and bad ideas, and we generally assume that good people get hold of good ideas and that bad people get hold of bad ideas. That is simple enough; we know where we are and we act accordingly. But we can't always realize that it is possible for good people to get hold of bad ideas. And when this happens the result is devilish. For the good people, feeling themselves to be good at heart, are inspired in all their acts by the fanaticism of the virtuous; and there is no fanaticism so ferocious as that of a consciously virtuous person. Then onlookers, (neutrals,) loath to believe that any evil thing can proceed from people who are virtuous at heart, condone or ignore and thus help to prolong offenses which they would long ago have recognized as evil if they had proceeded from an ostensibly evil people.

Now that, as I understand it, is what has happened in Germany. The good German people—the poets, philosophers, historians, political leaders, and, above all, the pastors and the professors—have got hold of the bad ideas of the militarists, with which they have for the last forty years been inoculated, and it is these bad ideas with which the good German people have saturated themselves which the German Government is putting into effect today.

And the sooner we recognize that the German people are behind the German Government the sooner we shall win the war. It is enfeebling to our efforts to imagine that the people are, as the pro-German propagandists urge, on the point of rebellion against the policy of their Government, and to suppose that we only have to wait for a change of Government—and that then a change of policy will follow. As long as that policy is successful the German people are not likely to want it changed. And, unfortunately for the rest of the world, that policy—a policy of force and fraud—has been terribly successful. In 1864, in 1866, in 1870, it made the German Empire. But that same policy pursued in the twentieth century will unmake that German Empire. For we have now, thank God, to deal with standards of morality—outside Germany—which are no longer those of autocrats, but of democrats, and the value of the action of the United States in joining the Allies is that it shows the good German people that their bad ideas are condemned, not only by the older, more prudish, and, as they say, effete nations of Europe, but by the largest, the most powerful, and the most up-to-date democracy in the world.

WANT CITY'S EYES ON CHARITY FUNDS

President Dowling Will Urge Aldermen to Order Licenses for Such Undertakings.

HOW BAZAAR MONEY WENT

District Attorney Says 50 Per Cent. Commission Was Collected on Gifts for Comfort Kits.

District Attorney Swann's investigation into the affairs of the Army and Navy Bazaar has brought a prompt response to his suggestion that hereafter the management of such charities be subjected to State or municipal supervision or both. Frank L. Dowling, President of the Aldermen, announced that he would today again introduce the proposed ordinance of Alderman Wendel to provide for municipal supervision of all forms of raising funds by public charity. This ordinance, requiring a license fee of $1, would compel an accounting to the city of all receipts and expenditures and would limit and fix the percentage to be retained as remuneration by the managers and other workers.

John Moffat, Executive Chairman of the Management Committee of "Hero Land," last night issued the following statement:

"The Management Committee of 'Hero Land' is heartily in accord with the plan as announced by President Frank L. Dowling, and I personally might add that I am in favor as well, of State regulation of undertakings gotten up ostensibly for charitable purposes, and went so far some weeks ago as to discuss with Barry Smith of the Charity Organization Society steps that might be taken to this end.

"We anticipate that the expenses of 'Hero Land' will probably total in the neighborhood of $150,000. It gives me pleasure, however, to state that virtually all the money necessary to meet the expenses has already been received, and there will be a surplus from the gate receipts and from other sources above the expenses. We have cash receipts at this time of $91,431.01, together with bills receivable of $59,262.70, a total of $150,693.71, made up in part by the advance sale of tickets and in part by cash donations definitely made toward the expenses of 'Hero Land.' Fifty-nine thousand dollars has been advanced by fifty-nine of the one thousand and eight committees which are to have exhibits, and profits from the general receipts will be divided among these fifty-nine committees.

"The expenses, roughly, and they can only be estimated roughly in such a huge undertaking, are: Rent, $1,500 per day; decorations and construction, $55,000; advertising and publicity, $35,000; salaries, including several months of preparation, $10,000; entertainment, music, &c., $10,000, a total of $149,000. Nothing is to be deducted from the receipts of 'Hero Land,' no commissions are to be paid, and no member of the Management Committee, directly or indirectly, is to receive any remuneration whatsoever. From the beginning this course was determined upon, and all expenses incidental to the getting of advertisements for the official program have been met privately, and one hundred cents of every dollar paid for such advertising will go to 'Hero Land' direct. Every committee taking part in 'Hero Land' will receive one hundred cents on every dollar taken in by it."

Evidence of the collection of huge fees from the advertising privileges of the Army and Navy Bazaar, District Attorney Swann said, had been disclosed in an investigation be started yesterday to learn why the net proceeds of the bazaar that were intended to provide comfort kits for the soldiers had amounted to only $754.96, out of the total receipts of $71,475. Mr. Swann said that George F. Sweeney, who had charge of the advertising privileges of the bazaar, had received $22,000 as his share of the receipts.

A page advertisement in the souvenir program was priced at $200, he continued. Several persons who had donated $1,000 each, insisting they did not want to advertise, but desired that the money go to the exclusive benefit of the bazaar, were listed as advertisers, and Sweeney collected $500 as his share from each donation of this form, the District Attorney asserted.

"George F. Sweeney, who operated under the name of the National Special Aid Society, 303 Fifth Avenue," said Mr. Swann, "is now engaged in a similar scheme to obtain advertisements on a 50 per cent. basis rakeoff to himself for the program for the Christmas Festival of the National League for Woman's Service, a patriotic preparedness organization, of which Miss Anne Morgan, Miss Maud Wetmore, and Miss Grace Parker are active members."

Sweeney, who was questioned by the District Attorney yesterday, said he had not yet solicited any advertisements for this organization. Edward S. Moore, Assistant Secretary of the Guaranty Trust Company, who acted as Treasurer of the bazaar, told Mr. Swann that he found Sweeney had opened a branch office at 180 Broadway to carry on the advertising work of the bazaar, and had without authorization placed the name of "Edward S. Moore, Treasurer," on the door of that office.

"From this office Sweeney sent out hundreds of telegrams in the name of Mr. Moore," said the District Attorney. "Sweeney denied that he had signed these appeals for contributions or advertisements, but he admitted that he had directed the sending of them."

It was Mr. Moore who employed the Federal Auditing Company to watch the financial affairs of the bazaar. He took this action after several persons had notified him that they had made donations or contributions which had not been acknowledged by the Treasurer, because Mr. Moore had not received the money.

Among others who were questioned yesterday by the District Attorney were Waldemar de Bille, the paid director; John J. Riordan, publicity manager, and Carlos H. De Montemar, Secretary of the bazaar. Mr. Swann said it was not his present intention to put the evidence thus far obtained in the financial affairs of the bazaar before the Grand Jury, but would continue the investigation.

"In the interest of all other patriotic funds and bazaars and honest charities," Mr. Swann added, "I would suggest that hereafter when taking subscriptions, donations, or money for any purpose that it be distinctly explained and guaranteed to the donors, in printed form or otherwise, that no part of their money is to be diverted for the profit of private persons who may have the handling of such funds."

NO MEAT FOR SENATOR REED

Missouri Landlady Shows Him That She Backs the Government.

From The Clinton (Mo.) Republican.

James Reed, who SAYS he represents the State of Missouri in the United States Senate and who spoke here Sunday night, called for meat yesterday morning at the Cozart Hotel. There are many people who believe that some one has been feeding the Senator meat oftener than is good for him now, and he didn't get it Tuesday morning, the reason being that Tuesday was the day set aside by the State Food Commissioner as meatless day, and the Cozart is observing the request.

Reed asked Mrs. Winfree if she was really going to cut out meat every Tuesday, and when she told him she was be ridiculed the idea, and said that it was a plan which would never work. "Just watch it for thirty days," said the Senator, "and you'll find that on Wednesday the people will eat more meat to make up for not having had any on the day before."

"When you get back to Washington," replied Mrs. Winfree, "look up Mr. Hoover and tell him the Cozart Hotel is supporting him and the Government in every possible way and will continue to do so."

The Senator didn't reply; he didn't even smile—but he ate fish.

Y. M. C. A. DRIVE ENDS; QUOTA IS EXCEEDED

Exact Figures for Country Not Yet Known, but $35,000,000 Is Passed.

MANY TO CONTINUE WORK

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie Give $250,000 and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., $100,000.

With a heavy stream of contributions pouring in from all parts of the country, the Y. M. C. A. war fund yesterday leaped over its goal of $35,000,000. The exact figures of the grand total will not be known until late this evening, when the returns from all the States will have been compiled. The drive itself ended last night at midnight, although workers in the various sections of the country announced their intention by wire to the national headquarters of the campaign, at 124 East Twenty-eighth Street, that they would continue to solicit contributions wherever the returns happened to fall short of the designated quotas. Dr. John R. Mott, General Secretary of the National War Work Council, made the following statement last night:

"We went over the top tonight. The American people have made it clear that they want performed this large and patriotic service. But it is necessary that we sweep way beyond all goals. Since the thirty-five-million-dollar budget was adopted in the Bankers' Club a few weeks ago new and highly significant events have taken place which make it absolutely essential that we have a far larger sum of money available for serving the enlisted men of the United States and of our allies than originally contemplated.

"I refer, first, to the critical situation on the eastern and southern fronts necessitating prompt expansion of our activities in those regions; secondly, the appeals which have come within a few days from the French Prime Minister asking that we help conduct 1,300 soldiers' homes scattered throughout the entire French Army zone with its millions of men, which item alone requires an increase in our budget of over $3,000,000; thirdly, a confidential request from another allied army for large help; fourthly, the recent great increase in the number of war prisoners, (there having been added within three weeks fully 300,000,) and these must be served by us if they are to be served at all; fifthly, developing plans of our Government make it patent that we will have much more to do for American troops than any of us had in mind when our budget was adopted. Therefore if we are to render the service which the nation has a right to expect from us, we actually need a very substantial oversubscription."

Mr. Taft Sends Congratulations.

From ex-President William H. Taft, Dr. Mott received the following telegram last night:

"I congratulate you and the War Council of the Y. M. C. A. and the country on the success of the $35,000,000 drive. It shows that every one has found that the people appreciate the indispensable character of the service which the great organization of which you are at the head must render to our boys in training camps and at the front and to the armies of our allies."

The final sum of $35,000,000 included an additional gift of $2,500,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation, which made a total of $3,500,000 received from that source since the beginning of the drive. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie made a contribution yesterday of $250,000. Other donations announced yesterday were:

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr.	$100,000
Mrs. Benjjamiin Brewster	25,000
Mrs. H. McK. Twombly	20,000
Charles Hayden	30,000

H. L. Doherty Co.	15,000
City Service Co.	15,000
American Brass Co.	25,000
Miss Elizabeth Lamont, (in memory of mother)	12,000

The latest returns from Chicago last night indicated that it had raised $2,700,000. Detroit wired that it had raised $719,000. Newark passed its quota at noon with a total of $326,000. Atlantic City reported $60,000. In Georgia the campaign will continue for the rest of the week. It will also go on for several days more in part of Tennessee. Delaware has raised more than $580,000. The Missouri Committee, which added $200,000 to its allotted quota of $800,000, reported yesterday that the State would wind up the drive with a grand total of $1,500,000. Racine telegraphed that men and women in the factories there were making real sacrifices to contribute to the fund. Employes of one of the factories donated an average of $4 each. In another factory the women contributed an average of $2 per capita.

The totals reported by some of the cities outside of New York yesterday were as follows:

It could not be determined late last night whether the $2,000,000 assumed by the women workers as their share of the $35,000,000 fund had been entirely raised. Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James, National Chairman of the Women's Committee, held a meeting of the women workers at her home yesterday. She said her committee would not abandon the campaign until it had raised every cent of $2,000,000.

Small Gifts Appreciated.

"So many women are still out of town," Mrs. James said, "and we will continue to receive donations all through November. We want none to think that small gifts are not acceptable to us. The large gifts are very gratifying because of the great need at is also to her gift will be received just as essential. If every women who has a boy in the army will send in what she is able to her wife will be received just as warmly as these larger sums given by those who have none in the army."

The women workers of Brooklyn have thus far reported a total of $49,935.

Dr. John P. Munn has received a letter from Dr. John M. T. Finney, chief surgeon of the Johns Hopkins Medical School, and head of Base Hospital 18 in France. It will be recalled that Dr. Finney declined election to the Presidency of Princeton University upon the resignation of President Wilson. Dr. Finney says:

"I know how much interested you are in the Y. M. C. A., and I want to tell you (and you tell for me those who are interested in the subject) what wonderful work they are doing here in France. Everywhere I hear most complimentary reports of the splendid work they are doing. I can bear witness to what they have done here in our hospital. Practically everything that we have in the way of interesting and amusing the patients and the men, indeed, the nurses and the staff, too, has come through the Y. M. C. A. Our little room that we have started has done effectual work, and as soon as they put up their building, which they are going to do for us in the near future, we will be very well fixed. For quiet, sane, efficient work, I will take off my hat to the Y. M. C. A., and I speak from actual observation and experience, comparing it with other organizations."

SUFFRAGISTS DENY PRO-GERMAN HELP

Say That Mrs. Wadsworth's Charge That Pacifists' Influence Carried Day Is Untrue.

POINT TO CAMPAIGN HERE

Emphasize That All Candidates for the Mayoralty Were for "the Cause."

Suffragists in New York expressed anger yesterday over charges by Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, wife of Senator Wadsworth, that pro-German and pacifist influences were back of the suffrage movement at this time. An analysis of the State suffrage vote made public in Washington by Mrs. Wadsworth after a conference with leading opponents of enfranchising women in which the Senator's wife set forth that the growth of Socialist support in New York City almost exactly accounted for the huge increase in the suffrage ballots, particularly aroused the anger of the suffragists.

A point generally made by the suffragists was that, woman suffrage having now become a fact, to herald it as an achievement of pro-Germanism, and thus by implication to accuse the great mass of women voters of being disloyal, was to furnish the German propagandists with a powerful weapon for use in their intrigues in Russia, Italy, and elsewhere. Both Mrs. Wadsworth and the newspapers which carried her story were charged with thus "insulting the women" and "furnishing the very propaganda ammunition which the suffragists themselves are accused of having profited by."

Mrs. Raymond Brown, one of the most active suffrage workers in the city examined Mrs. Wadsworth's statement with rapidly kindling indignation.

Cities Carried the Day.

"Does she think President Wilson is pro-German?" Mrs. Brown demanded. "Does she think Theodore Roosevelt and Secretary McAdoo are pro-German? Does she not realize that President Wilson asked the men of New York to vote for suffrage as part of the battle for democracy and that it was in that spirit they responded? Suffrage was defeated in those up-State rural communities, such as Livingston, Yates, and Lewis Counties, where the farmers live isolated lives and have no chance to come together and get in touch with modern waves of thought. It was carried in the cities, where the men read the newspapers, where the views of President Wilson and other such leaders of thought reached the rank and file of men voters.

"All that Mrs. Wadsworth knows," said Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, one of the vice chairmen of the New York State Woman Suffrage Party, "is what was the largest vote cast in the various districts. She can only make her own calculations as to what proportion of that vote was in favor of suffrage, and how much suffrage support in the same district came from ballots for the other candidates. It is an insult to loyal women who have done a massive war work even to intimate that the suffragists constitute a pro-German body or that the suffrage adherents do. I should consider it a pretty serious matter if I had to think that a large proportion of the vote cast for woman suffrage meant that the pro-Germans have expressed their will at the polls. The anti-suffragists are willing to stultify the good standing and loyalty of the great mass of our citizens in order to give an irresponsible and ill-directed stab at the suffrage cause.

"How does Mrs. Wadsworth think this headline," said Mrs. Laidlaw, pointing to the account of Mrs. Wadsworth's statement in THE TIMES, "will sound repeated in the Russian press by German propagandists? Does she think the reckless imputation of divided loyalty in New York State is helpful to this country in time of war? Is her patriotism so poor she is willing to befoul her own nest in this reckless and irresponsible manner?"

Mrs. Laidlaw pointed out that States in which women long have voted had furnished their quotas to the national army long before others in which man suffrage prevailed, and cited the patriotic record of Australia, a country which has figured splendidly in the war, though its women have voted for a long time.

View of a German Worker.

Miss Rita Kissin, who was the suffrage worker for the New York Woman Suffrage Party among the Germans of the city, said:

"It was the high cost of living which brought out the German vote—that, with a belief in good laws for child labor, and also I think a belief that the women would help to vote against total prohibition. The Germans do not wish whisky, but they do not wish laws prohibiting light wines and beer. Mrs. Wadsworth was quite mistaken in charging the Germans with disloyalty in voting for suffrage. The German housewife is thrifty and economical, and when I suggested the possibility of a woman at the head of public markets and of the women being able to use their influence with the Legislature against the hoarding of food and food speculation, then the women were with me as one woman."

NATIONAL SUFFRAGE AIM OF CONVENTION

"Votes for All in Two Years" Will Be Slogan of Great State Gathering.

National woman suffrage within two years will be the program put through at the forty-ninth annual convention of the New York State Woman Suffrage Party, which starts today at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, unless some radical upset to the party leaders' plans arises on the floor of the convention.

That the convention will differ radically from past convocations of its kind follows from the fact that the hitherto surpassing question "how to win" has been eliminated, and the prime business before a body claiming to represent more than a million and a quarter of women, is how to use the political power suddenly conferred upon them.

The suffragists have declined the invitation of the antis to abandon the whole question during the war and either to amalgamate with the men's parties in support of the Administration and the prosecution of the war, or maintain for a similar purpose a united body of women. Every indication last night was that they would be firm in that refusal and would stick to the position that national suffrage itself is an important war question, and that its coming would mean that the whole nation, both men and women, could get behind the war with their maximum power.

Second in interest to the program of the party is the selection of a new leader for the coming year. Mrs. Norman De R. Whitehouse, whose term as Chairman expires, was reported last night to be firm in her intention to refuse to stand for re-election. Gossip still concerned itself with the possibility of an up-State woman being chosen to succeed her.

Mrs. Whitehouse's annual report and a great rally and victory celebration in the Metropolitan Opera House tonight, at which Colonel Roosevelt and Governor Whitman will speak, are the principal events of the first day of the convention. The full program follows:

URGES SUFFRAGE STUDY.

Lillian D. Wald Opposes Party Enrollment of Women.

Miss Lillian D. Wald of the Henry Street Settlement, who was one of the leaders in the fight for woman suffrage, is among those who believe that the newly enfranchised women should not enroll now as party members, but should rather devote themselves to gaining political knowledge and experience through study and observation, and work for purity and progress in government while remaining independent of any political organization.

"The responsibility of the women of the city is to make themselves fit for citizenship," said Miss Wald yesterday. "The position of women in New York today in a way is parallel to that of the recently enfranchised people of Russia, who have to learn how to use the powers which they have acquired. In asking for the vote women were not asking primarily for privileges, but for duties, and now they should assume those duties. In my opinion, they can do this best by remaining free for a time at least from political parties.

"It is the first business of women to learn the mechanics of politics, and to think solemnly and seriously of their civic responsibility. Women should begin their education in classes, meetings, and gatherings of all kinds and by reading. I hope they will not be satisfied politically with the cheap expedient or lure to voters because of offices given to women or patronage of any kind. We women do not want to hold offices because of our sex, or because of the power we can wield. We want men and women to be selected because of fitness, and we want every party to realize that wordy platforms are not enough. We want definite programs faithfully carried out."

WOMEN FIND A HURDLE.

Get No Naturalization Papers if Husband Is an Alien.

The number of women applying to the county Naturalization Bureau for citizenship papers has been increasing daily since the women of this State won the right to vote. The law says that a woman is the same nationality as her husband, and unless the husband is a citizen the wife cannot be one, and so she cannot vote. Some of those who called said that their husbands were born in other countries and never had been naturalized. They had tried to induce them to become citizens, but without avail.

When papers were refused to these women they were much distressed. One woman said that she had worked for suffrage for ten years, and now that the cause had won she could not vote because her husband was an alien. County Clerk Schneider suggested that the women should apply to Congress for an amendment to the law permitting women to take out their papers whether their husbands were citizens or not. He thought a woman, in view of the growth of woman suffrage in the country, should stand on an independent footing.

WOMEN DEMOCRATS' BALL.

Newly Elected City Officials to be Entertained at Terrace Garden.

Terrace Garden was engaged yesterday by the Woman's Democratic Club of New York City for the big ball which the women are to hold on January 8. Invitations are to be sent out to every member of the new City Government. The ball is to introduce the new Democratic women voters to the men of their party and the returns will go toward the erection of a big central headquarters for the Democratic women.

Mrs. John S. Crosby is the founder and Honorary President of the club and Mrs. Charles D. Hirst, President. The headquarters of the committee is at 104 West Forty-seventh Street.

Miss Faith Terry Wed in London.

The cable has brought the announcement of the wedding on last Saturday in London of Miss Faith Wadsworth Terry, a daughter of the late Dr. J. Wadsworth Terry, a well-known physician of Englewood, N. J., and Mrs. Josephine C. Wilder Terry, to William Patterson, son of the late Rev. James Patterson and Susan Patterson of Ancrum, Roxburghshire, Scotland. The wedding took place in the Church of Scotland. Mrs. Patterson and her sister went to England in June, 1914, to spend a year or so, and war breaking out shortly afterward they remained, and both finally engaged in Red Cross work.

HENRY FLAGLER LEFT $75,000,000 ESTATE

Transfer Tax Report Shows He Spent $50,000,000 on Florida Enterprises.

HAD NO AUTO OR JEWELRY

Appraiser Reveals the Loss of a List of Personal Effects in Summer Home, Valued at $2,304.

Henry M. Flagler spent $50,000,000 on his Florida enterprises alone, and left an estate valued at at least $75,000,000 when he died on May 20, 1913. This, with many interesting facts regarding Mr. Flagler's early life and business career, were made known yesterday when Albert J. Berwin, transfer tax appraiser, filed his report on the value of Mr. Flagler's property subject to a tax in New York. The report reveals the fact that a list of the personal effects in Mr. Flagler's summer home at Orienta Point, Mamaroneck, appraised at $2,304, has been lost and it was accordingly impossible for Appraiser Berwin to determine whether this sum was the true valuation of property taxable here. He was compelled either to accept these figures or to refuse to sign the report.

Mr. Flagler's New York property, which includes only real estate and tangible property, was valued at $383,288. Of this amount $290,200 is the appraisal of his thirty-two acres of land at Orienta Point, where he usually spent his Summers. His stable at 21 West Fifty-fifth Street was worth $90,000, but the contents all belonged to his former coachman. He had no automobiles or jewelry, but owned three horses and several carriages worth $500. When he wanted to use a motor boat at Orienta Point he rented it. All his New York estate went to his widow, the late Mrs. Lily Flagler Bingham, as residuary legatee.

The question which caused Appraiser Berwin and Charles M. Travis, attorney for the State Controller, more or less concern was the failure of the Flagler estate representative to produce a list of furniture and other effects in the Orienta Point house appraised at $2,304 by Theodore Baellenhaussen. William H. Beardsley, President of the Florida East Coast Railway and one of the executors, said that the only reference to the value of the property appraised at $2,304 is in the list of assets filed in Florida, showing property at Orienta Point worth this sum. He said that this amount did not include paintings, silverware, glassware, bric-a-brac, books, ornaments, &c., which were not appraised.

Some Articles Excluded.

A letter from the late J. R. Parrott, one of the executors of the estate, to Baellenhaussen asking him to appraise the property, excluded the articles mentioned, but the reason was not shown. It was suggested that this property all belonged to Mrs. Flagler Bingham, and for that reason was excluded, but because of the death of Mrs. Bingham and also of Mr. Parrott the appraiser was not able to get information on this point. A new list could not be made because the house has been emptied of its contents, some of which were given to Mrs. Flagler and other articles distributed among legatees.

The appraiser was examined at length by Mr. Berwin in an effort to get some light on the question, and said that he had a list of the property but destroyed it some time ago.

"I was surprised that Mr. Flagler should have so unimportant a house for a man of his money,' the appraiser testified. "The furniture was mottled, and was superannuated and out of style. Nearly all of it was overstuffed furniture, and much of it was bought in 1882. Mr. Flagler had no antiques."

For the purpose of proving that Mr. Flagler was not a resident of New York, an affidavit was made by Mr. Beardsley containing facts concerning his life and business career, written from information given by Mr. Flagler to his pastor, the Rev. Dr. George Morgan Ward, of St. Augustine, for the purpose of an intimate personal history. The affidavit stated that Mr. Flagler's father was a Presbyterian minister at Hammondsport, N. Y., earning $300 a year at the time Mr. Flagler was born, and that the son was compelled to leave home at the age of 14, in 1844, to earn his living.

Clerk in Grocery Store.

Mr. Flagler obtained employment as a clerk in a grocery store at Republic, Ohio, and by saving his money was able to go into the grain business at Bellevue, Ohio, where he married.

John D. Rockefeller was then a commission merchant at Cleveland, and sold grain shipped to him by Mr. Flagler. The latter then went to Saginaw, Mich., to go into the salt business, but in three years left there penniless and in debt. He went to Cleveland to recoup his fortunes, and after going into the grain and produce business became interested in an oil refinery conducted by John D. and William Rockefeller and Samuel Andrews. This venture resulted in the formation of the Standard Oil Company in 1870. Mr. Flagler came to New York in 1882 and bought the house at 685 Fifth Avenue, which he sold in 1900, and in 1882 got his Orienta Point property.

The affidavit states that Mr. Flagler made his first trip to Florida in 1885, and spent most of his time there afterward. He built his residence, Kirkside, at St. Augustine in 1890, and lived there until 1901, when, after his remarriage, he built his mansion, Whitehall, at Palm Beach. He changed his residence back to St. Augustine in 1906, and it remained there.

His first enterprise in Florida was the Ponce de Leon Hotel, which he determined to build when he was compelled to stay at a small hotel on his first trip. He planned to spend $500,000, but the Ponce de Leon cost him $1,500,000. Other enterprises followed until he had invested $50,000,000. In spite of his vast properties his tax bill at St. Augustine for the last year of his life was only $3,000, based on an assessment of $75,000.

Rails Rise Sharply Near End of Dull Session—Steel Moves Up.

While dullness was the chief feature of yesterday's session of the stock market trading at times took on a quality to attract much attention. On the whole, the result of dealings was distinctly favorable, seeming to reflect a more cheerful sentiment among holders of railway shares in respect to the pending freight rate decision, and certainly reflecting a marked scarcity of stocks in the late afternoon. Between 2:30 and 3 o'clock, the leading rails advanced from 1 to more than 2 points under active bidding, while Steel lead the industrial group with a run forward of 3⅛ points, from 92 to 95⅛.

The demand for stocks toward the close created considerable surprise in some quarters of the Street where the marked weakness of certain high-grade railroad issues earlier in the day had been a matter of concern. Pennsylvania and Delaware & Hudson in the morning hours sold down to their lowest levels in a generation. The latter crumpled up a distance of 6½ points after short covering had lifted it 2 points from the opening price. When the general movement upward gathered force, these stocks profited to a substantial degree, especially Pennsylvania, with a net gain of a half point for the day.

It was quite possible that the stock market reaped yesterday something of a benefit from the quiet which has prevailed for several market sessions. Short selling dried up notably after the Governors of the Exchange last week made more emphatic their intention to curb operations on the destructive side of market values. Being disinclined to get on record as short sellers, it may have been the case that the period of dullness and steady prices gave the traders a fresh outlook, of a sort to stimulate them in an effort to seize a profit on the long side. There was nothing in the bulge, of course, to indicate its quality, whether transient or liable to extension in the next few days.

The new Government bonds, particularly the 4s, reflected again conversion by holders into cash without any too much regard for values. The 4s sold down as low as 97, a decline of 1.24 points from the maximum quotation of the day. Selling pressure was not pronounced in the 3½s, although they suffered a recession of more than a quarter point. The 4s rebounded quickly from the minimum, and the upward bidding which occurred late in the day comprised blocks large enough to indicate some concerted buying, presumably from banking quarters. The movement did not attract any especial attention in the Street, as it had been considered inevitable when the great loan was distributed that there would be subscribers who would quickly sell out. The market has been suffering from a growing supply of bonds in excess of the demand.

Call money rose to 5 per cent., with most loans placed at 4 per cent. The stiffening process evidently indicated that the Money Committee, with the Liberty Loan well out of the way, was showing a disposition to let the money market look after itself to a greater extent than for several weeks. Italian exchange dropped to a new low record, with the lire at a discount of about 40 per cent. French exchange continued the strength displayed last week.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Call Money Up to 5 Per Cent.

Although the opening and renewal rate for call money yesterday was 4 per cent., some transactions were put through at 5, which was the closing quotation. The low for the day was 3¾. In view of the fact that all through the period of financing the Liberty Loan the rate had not advanced beyond 4 per cent., yesterday's rise to 5 per cent. attracted some attention. Inquiry developed the fact that the Money Committee which had organized a "pool" and had been lending money freely to aid in the flotation of the war loan was no longer disposed to put out funds in as large volume as heretofore. It is understood that the committee has taken the stand that it has completed its work for the time being now that the Liberty Loan payments have been virtually disposed of, and that the time has arrived for the money market to take care of itself, which they say it can easily do as there does not appear to be any special demand for funds. The Money Committee has not been dissolved, and will stand ready to render service should conditions arise which would require special attention, but in the absence of any unusual developments, the so-called "pool" will no longer be resorted to for the present. It has been estimated that approximately $125,000,000 of the $200,000,000 made immediately available has been used thus far.

Purchases by Norwegian Banks.

Banks with foreign connections report the receipt of orders for the purchase of United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland 5½ per cent. bonds for the account of Norwegian institutions maintaining balances here. In some quarters it was thought that these orders were significant politically as showing Norway's sentiments as far as the Allies were concerned.

Cotton Still Soars.

Thirty-cent cotton became by so much nearer reality on the New York market yesterday that the official quotation for spot cotton for the day was over the mystic figure, at 30.10, although no sales were made at this record price. Prices of futures, however, continued their climb toward the same mark, making new high records for the season all down the list. The most significant feature was the great strength of the market on the very day that sees the imposition of drastic Governmental restrictions on British consumption of American cotton, while the ocean tonnage situation is still so bad that it appears doubtful if the British consumers can get even their limited allotment for some time to come. Yet despite this the South is hanging stubbornly on to its cotton, while the local transportation situation is complicating matters for even American consumers.

Stocks Bid Up With Speed.

Comment of brokers as they left the floor of the Stock Exchange yesterday at the close of business indicated a rather general belief that the market, for the time at least, stood in an "oversold" condition. The advance scored in the final half hour of business was impressive. As far as could be learned, there was no particular item of good news to stimulate buying. The quick gains under moderate trading, however, showed that factors of considerable importance were inciting the buying. Railroad stocks which had displayed weakness earlier in the day became conspicuous for their strength. The ticker showed beyond question that when bidders went after stocks the stocks were not there at the prices the bidders had expected.

Owens Bottle Shares Drop.

An extraordinary event of the day in stocks was the precipitate decline of 17½ points gross and 14 points net in Owens Bottle Machine. A rumor in brokerage offices had it that the shares were disposed of in closing out a loan, but whatever the reason for the sale of 1,100 shares the market showed its poor quality for receiving a specialty like this. Nothing was the matter with the company's earnings, nor with the attitude of numerous investors who have held the shares for a long time. The market was unable to absorb a thousand and more shares of a stock which has a big day normally with transactions of half that amount.

The Kennecott-Utah Copper Merger.

The fact that the Kennecott Copper Company, which is already understood to own close to 40 per cent. of the capital stock of the Utah Copper Company, has been, from indications, steadily buying more at favorable points of the market, has given rise to renewed talk of the possibility of Kennecott's acquiring control. This point was raised at the annual meeting of the Kennecott company last May, the explanation then being given that the Directors considered Utah Copper "an excellent investment," but were not looking for control, being entirely satisfied with that company's existing management and prospects. A financial news agency yesterday issued a statement from a Director to the same general effect, remarking upon the "cordial co-operation" between the two companies.

The Liverpool Freight Rates.

The British and American Governments have not yet taken the enormous premiums being bid for space for cotton to Liverpool under regulation, largely for the reason that there is nothing to regulate. The bids of $8 and up for 100 pounds, so far as can be discovered, are bids and nothing more, for the simple reason that there is no tonnage to be had at any price. In the circumstances the authorities, having plenty of troubles with actual rates, and with apportioning such tonnage as they have, are letting the bidding go on.

Ocean Transport Profiteers.

The authorities are finding most of their trouble, in regulating freight rates, with the course taken not only by neutral shipowners but by American owners, whose number is happily small, who are charging "what the traffic will bear" on ships which they operate themselves. The Shipping Board has broad powers and is using them, in some cases, daringly, but while it has charter rates and rates on chartered tonnage pretty well in hand with its requisition club, it has not yet found a way to reach these gentry effectively. The British method has been to lie in wait for them with the excess-profits tax, which is much more severe on the other side of the ocean. In striking contrast to this type of owner has been the course of the British Elder-Dempster Company, which from the first has steadily refused to make one penny's profit out of the war, and is today charging only sufficient advances on its pre-war rates to cover actual increases in its own expenses.

New B. & O. Director Elected.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 19.—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad stockholders today elected F. H. Goff of Cleveland, Ohio, to the board to succeed the late Oscar G. Murray. President Daniel Willard called attention to the unprecedented demands upon the facilities of the company and of other railroads during the year.

LONDON MARKET CONFIDENT

Demand for Shell Oil Shares a Feature of the Trading.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The stock market maintained a generally confident tone today without any increase in business, but prices were occasionally harder. The feature of the trading was the demand for Shell oil shares now that the authorities have requisitioned the shares of the Royal Dutch Oil Company under the mobilization scheme. Spanish and Scandinavian bonds were good on the exchange position, but the other sections were dull.

Money was in increased demand and discount rates were quiet.

QUICKSILVER CO. GIVES UP.

$10,000,000 Corporation Gets a Receiver for $98,000 Assets.

An application for the voluntary dissolution of the Quicksilver Mining Company, a New York corporation formed about fifty years ago with $10,000,000 capital, was made to Supreme Court Justice Giegerich yesterday by the officers and a majority of the directors of the corporation, on the ground that its present assets are not sufficient to insure the payment of all its obligations. The Court appointed Maurice Deiches receiver with a bond of $10,000 and named Algernon T. Norton to take testimony on the application on Jan. 10 next, when persons opposed to the application are directed to appear.

The petitioners are Joseph Kaufman, president; Edwin Reynaud, vice president; Charles F. Tracy, secretary and treasurer, and Clinton E. Whitney, Wayne L. Steinborge and William H. Lotty, directors. The corporation was formed to do business in California and all its stock has been issued. Its assets aggregate $98,000, of which $68,000 is the value of 6,800 acres of land at Almaden, Cal., $20,000 improvements on property, and $5,000 in personal property. Claims aggregating $94,000 are listed, and there are other valid obligations making the total in excess of the assets. The largest claim against the company is a judgment for $10,724, obtained by C. P. Anderson, general counsel, in San Jose County, Cal.

As You Pay Bills

One of the reasons why men save more if they start buying stocks and bonds on The Partial Payment Plan is that they meet their thrift obligations just as they do their rent bills.

Instead of starting out on a vague resolution to spend less money, you enter into an agreement to make regular monthly payments when you open an account on The Partial Payment Plan.

You include your appropriation towards thrift under the head of money to be paid out, but, instead of receipted bills, you have bonds or stock certificates in your possession at the end of the year.

Send for Booklet B-15, "Partial Payment Plan."

NEW LIBERTY BONDS SLUMP ON DELIVERY

Violent Decline on Stock Exchange Marks Receipt by Subscribers.

NET LOSS FOR DAY IS .84

Bankers Point Out That Many Who Subscribed Heavily Are Seeking to Reduce Investments.

Simultaneously with the beginning of the delivery of the United States Government 4 per cent. Liberty Loan bonds by the Federal Reserve Bank to subscribers who had paid for them in full, the price of the bonds declined violently yesterday on the Stock Exchange. The 4s opened at 98.24, or .10 under Saturday's closing, and sold down to 97, a new low record. More than $1,000,000 of the day's sales, amounting to $1,846,500, changed hands at this level, including a block of $910,000. Later in the session the bonds rallied to 97.50, which was the final quotation, representing a net loss of .84 for the day.

The 3½ per cent. bonds of the first Liberty Loan opened at 99.80, sold down to 99.02, and closed at 99.20, a loss of .38 for the day on sales of $1,180,000.

The sharp decline in the 4s was not a surprise, for it had been expected that the moment the bonds became available the process of distribution would set in, and that in course of it some subscribers would liquidate their holdings, the accumulated selling orders having the effect of depressing quotations. This situation obtained in the case of the first Liberty Loan, and after the redistribution had taken place the 3½ bonds gradually recovered their loss and sold close to par. It is believed that the same movement will take place in respect to the new 4s and that by the time the next loan is offered they will sell near their issuing price, especially inasmuch as they are convertible into subsequent bond issues bearing a higher rate of interest.

Decline Believed Natural.

The downward movement in the 4s appears to be sharper than was the initial decline in the 3½s for the reason that the issue is larger and because trading on a "when issued" basis had not been indulged in, all transactions on the Exchange having been restricted to dealings in actual bonds. It was natural, therefore, that the bonds should decline on the first day that subscribers had any assurance of getting their bonds.

In explaining yesterday's decline in the 4s bankers pointed out that doubtless many individuals, banks, and business concerns had subscribed to larger amounts than they could comfortably carry and that consequently they were reducing their investments. There were reports to the effect that several out-of-town selling orders represented liquidation on the part of banks and individuals who had subscribed large amounts simply for the purpose of making a showing and without any intention of retaining the bonds permanently. In some of these cases substantial subscriptions were made for advertising purposes, while in other instances banks and corporations supplied subscriptions solely with the view of having their city or town fulfill its quota. Evidence of out-of-town banks subscribing with the view of "making a showing" is in the possession of New York banks which received letters from their correspondents to sell the bonds in the same mail that brought their subscriptions. Subscribers of this class, it was pointed out, are not averse to losing several points on the sale, feeling that the loss had been offset by the advertising value of its subscription announcement.

Why First Issue Sells Higher.

The 3½ per cent. bonds are selling higher than 4s for the following reasons: (1) The process of redistribution has already taken place; (2) the complete tax exemption feature they possess is lacking in the 4s, the same making the 3½s of greater value to persons of large income; (3) the issue is smaller and is likely to become still smaller as the conversion privilege is more generally availed of; (4) if the 3½s are converted into 4s the new 4s will have a longer maturity than the bonds of the second Liberty Loan, and consequently are preferred by many investors. Both issues are convertible into subsequent issues.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York has received to date $949,239,980 in payment of the $1,163,475,200 of 4 per cent. Liberty Loan bonds allotted to subscribers in this district. The full-paid bonds total $881,919,866, or about 75 per cent., according to the latest returns. Thus far the bank has delivered $296,393,850, or one-third of the bonds fully paid by subscribers.

COTTON SOARS AGAIN

Rise Carries Entire List to New High Records for Season—Net Gain 36 to 49 Points.

Despite the fact that the new British Government restriction of 40 per cent. upon the Lancashire cotton consumption went into effect yesterday, the local cotton market again went soaring, with heavy Liverpool buying and local trade buying featuring the entire session. The rise in prices carried the entire list to a new high records for the season, more than wiping out the reaction of last Friday, while spot cotton was quoted at 30.10 for middling upland, although no sales were recorded. Futures closed at net advances of from 36 to 49 points.

The market opened firm at an advance of 25 to 38 points and sold 40 to 50 points net higher right after the call. Both Liverpool and domestic trade interests were good buyers at the start, but the demand tapered off at the advance, which encountered a good deal of realizing and considerable Southern selling. On reactions of 15 or 20 points from the best, however, the buying again appeared while the selling was by no means general or aggressive and prices recovered to practically the high point of the morning. The close was within 4 or 5 points of the best on most positions.

No change was reported in the situation as to available supplies of tonnage, but the large exports for the day and the strong tone of the afternoon stock market probably contributed to the closing advance. Reports received from Memphis early said that members of the exchange there estimated the crop at 10,732,000 bales on the average—a figure just about in line with the average talk around the ring here since the publication of the last ginning figures. Later it was rumored that returns to a prominent Southern authority indicated a yield of 11,147,000 bales, excluding linters, but there appeared to be no change in popular ideas of the yield on the midday setback. Exports for the day were 40,687 bales, making 1,526,017 so far this season. Southern spot markets as officially reported were unchanged to 35 points higher. Houston showed the maximum advance and reported sales of 6,425 bales on the basis of 28.10 for middling.

WAR ADDS IMPETUS TO MANUFACTURING

National City Bank Shows Big Gain Over Period Just Preceding Conflict.

EXPORTS JUMP FOURFOLD

Iron and Steel Values Multiply Six Times, and That of Cotton Treble.

The extraordinary expansion in manufacturing activities in the United States since the start of the European war, was summarized in a compilation made public yesterday by the National City Bank. The figures are all the more interesting because of the fact that no Government census of manufactures in this country has been undertaken since 1914, when the war began. They are based on the increase in exports and imports in that period.

The large gain in production is illustrated not only by the figures of increased imports of manufacturing material and increased exports of manufactures, but also by the fact that the quantity of pig iron produced in this country in the eight months ended with August, 1917, was 25,660,000 tons, against 16,355,000 tons in the same months of 1914. It also was shown that the quantity of cotton used by the factories of the United States increased approximately 25 per cent. in the three-year period, indicating that the actual quantity of manufactures turned out had increased greatly, while the advance in prices still further raised the total value of the output as compared with 1914. While the growth in war material production was most marked, the bank adduced figures to support the belief that the gains extended also to classes of articles used in peaceful trade pursuits.

Finished manufactures ready for consumption exported in the nine months ended with September last, amounted to $2,063,000,000, against $466,000,000 in the same months of 1914. Manufactures for use in manufacturing aggregated $957,000,000, compared with $262,000,000 in the corresponding months of 1914. Thus the total of manufactures exported in nine months of 1917 was $3,020,000,000, against $728,000,000 three years before.

"While this very large increase occurs," the bank's statement said, "to a considerable extent, in strictly war material, it also applies to a large proportion of the classes of goods produced by our manufacturers. Iron and steel manufactures as a whole, for example, show a total export value in the eight months ended with August, 1917, of $803,767,000, against $140,246,000 in the corresponding months of 1914, being thus six times as much in value in 1917 as in 1914. Manufactures of cotton show in the eight months of 1917 total exports amounting to $91,907,000, against $34,028,000 in the same months of 1914, having thus a little more than trebled in value of exports in the period in question. Cars and carriages, including in this term freight and passenger cars for railways, automobiles, both freight and passenger, airplanes, motor cycles, and bicycles show a total for the eight months of 1917 of $111,073,000, against $30,361,000 in 1914, having thus nearly quadrupled in value in the period under consideration.

"Copper of all sorts exported in the eight months of 1917 was valued at $249,676,000, against $89,713,000 in the same months of 1914, having practically trebled in value in the three-year period. Leather and manufactures thereof more than doubled in the period, having been in the eight months of 1917 $76,303,000, against $35,491,000 in the like period of 1914. Paper and manufactures thereof exported in the eight months of 1917 amounted to $26,841,000, against $13,337,000 in 1914. Tinplate showed a total in 1917 of $24,211,000, against $2,930,000 in the same months of 1914. Refined sugar, which has seldom formed an important factor in the export trade, showed for the eight months of 1917 exports amounting to $48,421,000, against $2,595,000 in the same months of 1914."

The bank's statement shows that the total value of raw material imported for use in manufacturing in the eight months of 1917 reached $886,683,000, against $436,234,000 in the same months of 1914, having thus practically doubled in the three-year period. Manufactures for further use in manufacturing imported in the eight months of 1917 amounted to $364,287,000, against $198,584,000 in the same months of 1914, having also nearly doubled in the war period. These two great groups of manufacturing material showed for 1917 an aggregate of $1,051,000,000, against $635,000,000 in the same months of the first war year.

Detailed figures showed that the raw cotton imports in the eight months of 1917 amounted in value to $35,182,000, against $18,025,000 in the 1914 period, while hides and skins in 1917 reached a value of $168,679,000, against $86,807,000 in 1914. Eight months' imports of india rubber and substitutes totaled $170,588,000, against $50,088,000 in 1914. Raw silk entries in the eight months of the year aggregated $111,787,000, compared with $63,407,000 in 1914; fibres, $55,402,000, against $36,291,000; wool, $134,130,000, against $50,521,000, and pig tin, $43,746,000, against $24,334,000 in 1914.

WHEAT.

Despite the small receipts of wheat last week at interior points, the visible supply in the United States increased 1,934,000 bushels, including arrivals of Canadian wheat. This brings the total up to 19,564,000, compared with 71,332,000 last year. Advices from the Pacific Coast said that Australian wheat is arriving there in increased quantities. It is understood that part of this will be used for domestic requirements and some for transshipments across the Continent for export. Advices from Europe indicated a probable improvement in the tonnage situation, which gave rise to expectations of larger shipments.

RYE.—Market easy, No 2 Western, $1.87½, cost and freight, New York.

CORN.

Trading in the corn market was quiet, with traders not disposed to take an aggressive stand either way owing to the recent disciplinary action against leading Western operators. Moreover, sentiment was divided and the trade was puzzled over the outlook. Cash corn in the West was lower. Old corn declined about 5 cents a bushel, and good new corn was in some cases 15 to 20 cents lower. Despite a rather more bearish statistical showing the total visible was only 1,344,000 bushels and many believe that there is little chance of a sustained decline of any great importance for contracts until a surplus has been accumulated and until cash corn is selling nearer a parity. In the local cash market prices were unsettled, new yellow being quoted at $2.08⅝, cost and freight, New York, ten days shipment, and Argentine corn at $2.05, free on board, cars to arrive.

OATS.

The oats market was easier early owing to the decline in corn and on predictions of larger receipts. Offers were well taken, however, and prices rallied, closing with little change from the final of Saturday. The visible supply showed a decrease of 78,000 bushels for the week, compared with an increase of 1,299,000 last week and an increase of 483,000 last year. Exporters were fair buyers and sales were reported of 300,000 bushels. The local cash market was steady: standard quoted at 73@73½c; No. 2 white, 74c; No. 3 white, 72½@73c; No. 4 white, 72@72½c; fancy clipped white, 74@75½c; ordinary clipped white, 73½@74½c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

There was only a quiet trade in provisions and prices were irregular but without important changes either way. The hog market was easier and receipts were somewhat in excess of expectations. Chicago reported 48,000 hogs for the day, with estimates of 22,000 for Tuesday. Kansas City received 8,000 and Omaha 5,600.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The recent weakness in the near positions in the cottonseed oil market with tenders on November contracts has given the impression that the spot position is easier and consequently the market has shown more or less weakness. Trading yesterday was again quiet, with sales of 5,300 barrels, and final quotations were 15 points lower to 10 points net higher. Range of prices:

COFFEE.

The coffee market was easier yesterday. Recent war news appeared to have discouraged such hope as there may have been of an early reopening of Brazil's European outlet, and there has been scattering liquidation for the last two or three days. Selling of this sort became a little more active, owing to reports that Brazil was showing more disposition to press its coffee for sale, while it seemed that a more optimistic view had also gained ground regarding the outlook for ocean freight room and importations. The market opened at a decline of 7 to 10 points and closed at a net loss of 12 to 15 points. The local spot market was easier at 7½c for Rio 7s and 9¼c for Santos 4s. Range of prices:

SUGAR.

There were no fresh developments in sugar, and, while the recent distribution of moderate lots of neutral sugar helped the situation in this district, the relief was only temporary, and in some sections it is impossible for households to obtain any sugar at all. The car shortage is keeping beets in the West, and no immediate relief can be expected from that quarter. The new crop Cubas cannot possibly arrive here before the latter part of December, although efforts are being made there to start grinding unusually early. The Porto Rico factories will start up on Dec. 4 and hurry forward as rapidly as possible. New crop Cubas are offered in this market, but until the Governments agree on a price no sales are likely to be made. The new sugars offered are for January-February-March shipments. A Havana cable says that President Menocal intends to take a stand in favor of the smaller Cuban sugar interests for a price of 4¾c, free on board, Cuban ports, instead of 4½c, as proposed by Herbert C Hoover, United States Food Administrator. In well-informed circles it is reported that the President may place an embargo on sugar exports, no matter what the destination, if the position of the small interest is not taken into consideration. Spot prices were unchanged, at 5⅞c for Cubas, cost and freight, equal to 6.90c for centrifugal and 6.02c for molasses. The following are list prices of leading grades of refined sugar: Cut loaf, 9.85c; crushed, 9.60c; Mould A, 8.85c; cubes, 9.10c; XXXX powdered, 8.55c; powdered, 8.50c.; fine granulated, 8.35c; Diamond A, 8.35c; confectioners' A, 8.25c; No. 1, 8.20c.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 5,127 packages. Market very short of fresh creamery extras and high scoring, and prices were further advanced, with a very firm feeling. Fine firsts sympathized a little, but market is well supplied with the secondary grades, and sales of these are very slow. Renovated quiet. Ladles steadier. Packing stock unchanged. EGGS.—Receipts yesterday, 6,473 cases. Fancy qualities of fresh-gathered eggs continue scarce and firm. Medium and lower grades are rather quiet and values are still in a very wide range, according to the varying proportion of fresh and older eggs contained in the cases. Storage eggs are a trifle steadier, but trading is only moderate, and there is little change in the full range of values. Nearby eggs in light supply, and fancy newlaid qualities command high prices, but buyers at top quotations are critical, and the mixed lots go at very irregular prices. OFFER BRITISH BILLS AGAIN.

J. P. Morgan & Co. to Put Out $15,000,000 at 6% This Week.

J. P. Morgan & Co. announced yesterday the resumption of weekly offerings of 90-day British Treasury bills. None were sold during the Liberty Loan campaign, and the total outstanding is approximately $100,000,000. While previous sales were made at a discount of either 5¼ or 5½ per cent., the $15,000,000 lot offered this week will be sold at 6 per cent., a rate which appears to be particularly attractive to banks as short term investments, especially in view of the fact that the British Treasury bills are available as collateral security for Government deposits.

The first lot of $15,000,000 of the bills matures tomorrow and will be paid. A similar amount of bills will mature every week until the full $100,000,000 is paid, and it was said yesterday that funds were on hand to meet payments for three successive weeks. Originally it was announced that weekly offerings of $15,000,000 would be made and that at no time would more than $150,000,000 be outstanding. The bankers have found, however, that a total of $100,000,000 is sufficient, and according to present plans it will not be raised to the higher figure.

Curtiss Aeroplane Earnings.

A report of earnings of the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motors Corporation and its subsidiaries, for the nine months ended Sept. 30 last, shows earnings of $6.90 on the common stock, but without allowing for war taxes. The total gross receipts from sales of airplanes was $6,588,806, and from all sources $9,950,207, from which was derived a manufacturing profit of $2,713,639 and a final net profit of $1,821,566.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Under the leadership of New York Central, Reading, Steel common, and Union Pacific prices on the Consolidated Stock Exchange moved sharply upward in the last hour. The upturn was not a reversal of form on the part of securities, but rather a sudden stimulus to a market that had been trending gradually upward all day. Certain definite and indefinite reports appeared equally effective in the activity and optimistic view taken of the market.

COMMERCIAL PAPER.

Yesterday...5¼ per cent. for the best names.
Saturday....5¼ " " " " "

The quotations are for six months' paper.

Retail Sales Show Improvement.

The tang in the air yesterday, coupled with the sunshine and the attractive offerings advertised in the Sunday papers, brought shoppers out in crowds and the result was one of the best Mondays the dry goods stores have seen in some time. The fur departments were among the most active of all, according to store executives, while ready-to-wear garments and knit underwear were among the other lines of merchandise that sold well. Early buying of holiday goods also was a feature. One executive said that the size of the business done yesterday was more than ordinarily significant, in that it apparently marked the ending of the "psychological slump" in consumer buying that grew out of the floating of the recent Liberty Loan.

Sometimes It Is "50-50."

Not all of the returns of merchandise that might be called illegimate are the fault of the women who bring the goods back, according to the head of a local store. He cited as an instance, in which the returner was in the wrong, a case in which the article returned was a Sitz bath, which was ordered taken out for no other reason than that the woman involved wanted the money she received from the transaction. As illustrative of the other side of the question he told of a woman who, following the death of her mother, had found some silk that had been bought twenty-five or thirty years before and had never been taken from the package. When the matter came to the attention of this store's silk buyer, he offered to take the silk back and credit the account of the woman. While he approved of the transaction, the executive said that if any one was at fault it was the buyer.

Burlaps Were More Active.

There was considerably more snap to the opening of the burlap market here yesterday than was the case a week ago. Buyers have apparently become reconciled to the high prices prevailing and have assumed a kind of "grin and bear it" attitude. While some of the business put through was done on spots, the great bulk of it was on goods that are now afloat and due to arrive here in the course of the next thirty days or so. Some of the goods traded in, however, will not reach this country for a considerably longer time than that. These were the basic asking prices quoted here yesterday on standard forty-inch goods. Eight-ounce 16½ cents; 10½-ounce, 21½ cents. Reports from Calcutta and Dundee told of little that was new.

High Felt Hat Prices.

A fair illustration of the effect the war has had on the prices of felt hats for men is the figure quoted by a leading Fifth Avenue shop on a high grade beaver finished felt. It is offered in golden brown and other shades, has an attractive silk band in a novelty turban arrangement, and is alpine in shape with a medium width turned up brim. Before the war this hat sold for $6. And at this price the retailer felt that he made a fair profit. This Fall, with his percentage of profit nearly halved, the price is $10. "And from present indications," added this retailer, "the price of that same quality hat next year will be correspondingly higher."

A Case of "Sauce for the Goose."

Apropos of the item recently published in THE TIMES concerning a growing tendency on the part of certain women's ready-to-wear manufacturers to open shops of their own in other cities, and what would happen to these men if their wholesale customers found it out, a local manufacturer asserted yesterday that they were quite within their rights in selling direct. "At least one of the big stores in this city," he said, "has for some time been making quite a little of the goods it sells. The same is true of one of the leading Canadian stores, and also of a big Middle Western store. Yet no manufacturer would refuse to sell these stores solely on that ground. So when manufacturers sell direct through their own shops, it is to my mind only a case of 'sauce for the goose' being 'sauce for the gander.'"

What the Toy Buyers Face.

The lot of the toy buyers is by no means an easy one this year, in spite of the great strides the American manufacturers of these goods have taken in filling the gap left by the greatly reduced imports of German and other foreign toys. A buyer cited a specific case yesterday in which a woman came to the toy department in search of a head for a doll that was somewhat the worse for wear. The only thing that would come anywhere near filling the bill, from the standpoint of beauty, quality of hair, &c., was priced at $4. The woman could hardly contain herself when the price was told. "Why," she said, "the whole doll only cost $2.49 last year."

Men's Shoe Sales Less.

Though sales of shoes for women during the Fall season have been about on a par with the same period a year ago, it is said that the volume of men's shoes sold so far this season has fallen off quite considerably from the record of the previous year. This is thought to be due in great part to the course of prices in the two lines. They have not been the same. While men's shoes are higher than they have ever been before, shoes for women are not advanced from the high prices of a year ago, and in some cases they are lower. Then, too, it is pointed out that women are less likely to wear their shoes a second season than men are, due to the radical style changes that may take place in the course of a year, while men's footwear is more or less the same year after year.

Demand for Men's Gloves.

Buckskin, suede, and kid gloves for men are reported to be moving very rapidly over the retail counter. A number of merchants in many sections are said to have been somewhat unprepared for the demand which has developed. Coming to market to replenish some of their depleted stocks, they are said to be finding it very difficult to get merchandise for immediate delivery. Manufacturers in most instances are sold out for some little time ahead, and stocks in jobbing houses are neither as large nor as varied as usual. It seems the prediction made earlier in the season, that business would be seriously curtailed due to the operation of the draft law and to high prices generally, has not materialized, or at least not to any such extent as was feared. Consequently, those merchants who held back now find themselves facing the holiday season with lines which are to some extent incomplete, and with little chance of filling them.

Gray Goods Open Well.

Higher prices on several constructions of printcloths in this market yesterday did not keep buyers from taking them. Spot sales of 39-inch 68-72s and 38½-inch 64-60s were put through at 12¾ and 11¼ cents, respectively, and 64-56s in the latter width were sold for delivery to March next at 10¾ cents. Spot 39-inch 56-44s were held at 9¼ cents, with business done at 9 cents for shipments running to March. In the lower-count cloths 38½-inch 48 squares, 44 squares and 44-40s sold at 8½, 8, and 7½ cents, respectively. Sales of 56-60s, four-yard sheetings were made at 14 cents, while for 48-52s, four-yards 13¼ cents was paid. Four-yard, 48-square sheetings brought 13¼ to 13½ cents, according to delivery. Printcloth prices closed this way:

39-inch, 80-80s...15¼c	38½-inch, 64-60s...11¼c
39-inch, 72-76s...14¼c	38½-inch, 64-56s...10¾c

More Men Wearing Fancy Vests.

Fancy vests for men, in the darker color combinations are said to be coming back into vogue this year. More of these have been sold during the past few months in the Eastern market, it is said, than through the entire season last year. One of the novelty garments offered is of a heavy wool jersey weave, and it seems to have proved quite popular. It is of the five-button type and is worn with a regular business suit. Though some few have the same material in both back and front, most are pieced like the ordinary vest. At the outset of the season some models were shown with the belted effect in front a few inches from the button, but they have not met with any marked success. Other materials in colors differing from the usual suit shades have also been well taken.

DONATE WOOL FOR KNITTING

Mrs. Dyer's "Rainbow" Auxiliary Enlarges Its Activities.

More than 100 members of Mrs. George Dyer's "Rainbow" Division Auxiliary, which furnishes free woolen worsted to every one in New York who will knit a sweater, helmet, pair of stockings, muffler, or brace of wristlets for an American soldier, held an enthusiastic meeting yesterday morning at the home donated by Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer, 7 East Seventy-third Street.

Seven women pledged themselves to donate $75 a month for six months to buy worsted. This will buy 1,200 pounds of worsted. Three-quarters of a pound is needed to make one sweater. Three hundred knitters have already been enrolled. Among those who attended yesterday's meeting were Mrs. Winthrop Ames, Mrs. Frederic R. Coudert, Mrs. Nelson Burr, and Mrs. Mortimer Schiff. Mrs. Dyer's organization left the National League for Women's Service two weeks ago and joined the American Red Cross. It is equipping all soldiers at Mineola with woolen garments. Last week it provided 2,200 woolen helmets to a regiment of Idaho and Dakota men who had come east without warm clothing.

New Haven Registers Women for War.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 19.—Registration of women for industrial service during the war, voluntary and paid, began in New Haven today. Women will be called to take the places of men who have gone into military service or women who have volunteered for some other form of war duty. To avoid housing problems it is hoped that enough registrants will be obtained here to supply all demands for labor in New Haven.

REAL ESTATE FIELD

A test of the zone law, as affecting an important Madison Avenue blockfront, is being anticipated as a result of the filing of plans, yesterday, by Lord Astor of England, for a seven-story store and showroom building, on land now restricted against such use. The plans, filed by Peabody & Brown, architects, call for the erection of a $1,000,000 structure to occupy the frontage on the east side of Madison Avenue, from Thirty-fifth to Thirty-sixth Street, and to measure 197.6 feet on the avenue by 135 feet on each street.

The application of Lord Astor, last May, for the removal of the zoning law restriction which prohibits business occupancy on the Madison Avenue frontage, was denied by the Board of Estimate. Since that time the opinion has been prevalent that he would eventually seek to test the validity of the restriction, on account of the changing character of the neighborhood.

It could not be learned yesterday whether he intended to bring the matter to an early issue. The site is now occupied by sixteen dwellings.

Sells Fifty-sixth Street Residence.

Mrs. Sidney Turner Dyer of Baltimore, Md., widow of the late Elisha Dyer, Jr., has sold the five-story American basement residence at 3[illegible] West Fifty-sixth Street, on a lot 25 by 100.5.

The property, which is assessed at $125,000, was built by William Hall's Sons. It will be remodelled and occupied by the new owner. Edward J. Hogan negotiated the sale.

Bronx Apartments in $200,000 Trade.

Bronx and Manhattan properties figured yesterday in an exchange involving about $200,000. The Benenson Realty Company sold to Anna M. Jones the two five-story apartment houses at the northeast corner of Monterey Avenue and 180th Street, on plots measuring 48 by 100 and 57 by 100 each. The houses contain seven stores and have been held at $130,000.

In exchange the buyer gave the five-story store and loft building at the southwest corner of Church and Canal Streets, on a lot with a frontage of 25.7 on Canal Street, 41.6 on Church Street and a westerly line of 46.8 feet; also the vacant plot, 72 by 94, at the northeast corner of Heath Avenue and Albany Crescent. H. H. Cohen was the broker in the transaction.

Baptist Mission Increases Its Holdings

Daniel P. Moloney and others sold to the New York City Baptist Mission Society 81 West Third Street, a two-and-a-half-story building on a lot 25 by 109. The society now controls a plot fronting 50 feet on Third Street and 109 feet on Thompson Street, abutting the Judson Memorial Baptist Church.

Private Dwelling Deals.

The Hudson Mortgage Company sold to Arthur L. Trowbridge 59 East Thirty-fourth Street, a four-story and basement dwelling on a lot 25 by 95.

The four-story private dwelling 236 Central Park West, for many years the residence of Hannah Elias, was sold in foreclosure yesterday in an action against Elizabeth M. Mueller, who last year took it from Mrs. Elias for nonpayment of a mortgage. The house is on a lot 20 by 98.4 located 60.4 feet south of Eighty-fourth Street. The auction buyer was the plaintiff, the Excellent Realty Company, on a bid totaling $24,216. Joseph P. Day was the auctioneer.

Dr. Arthur H. Terry, Jr., has sold the three-story dwelling at 411 Convent Avenue, on a lot 20 by 75, through Moore, Schutte & Co.

Bronx Sales.

Frederick Brown, operator, sold the northwest corner of Mapes Avenue and 181st Street, Bronx, a five-story apartment house on a lot 46 by 94.6 to Mrs. Millie Rosenberg. Freidus & Co. and Louis Fine negotiated the sale.

Twenty-One Dwellings for Jamaica, L. I.

Land has been purchased and plans prepared for twenty-one single family dwellings to be erected by the Acanthus Realty Company, Inc., on the east side of Middletown Street, Jamaica, L. I., starting at the southeast corner of Shelton Avenue and extending south on the easterly side of Middletown Avenue for a distance of 495 feet. The Acanthus company has given a mortgage to the Berner Realty Corporation for $35,700 on the land and a building mortgage amounting to $99,750 to the Long Island City Savings Bank. The buildings will sell for about $7,000.

New Jersey.

Joseph Paterno, as president of the Hallmark Realty Corporation, resold the loft building at the southeast corner of Market and Halsey Streets, Newark, N. J., to the Prospect Realty Corporation for investment. Louis Kamm, Inc., was the broker.

Queens Borough Sales.

N. S. Jonas sold to the Omnis Corporation, of Richmond Hill, the property on the northeast corner of Myrtle and Hanson Avenues, 100 by 137 feet, 18 by 70 feet on the southwest corner of Woodbine Street and Woodward Avenue, 34 by 50 feet on the south side of Woodbine Street 110 feet west of Woodward Avenue, 40 by 90 feet on the west side of Seneca Avenue 20 feet south of Woodbine Street, 20 by 90 feet on the west side of Seneca Avenue 80 feet south of Woodbine Street, and 26 by 70 feet on the west side of Woodward Avenue 18 feet south of Woodbine Street. All of the property is in the Ridgewood section.

Westchester.

Ferdinand W. Herz sold the ten lots at the corner of Corona Avenue and Second Street, Pelham Heights, to a client of Fish & Marvin, who intends to build a residence for his own occupancy. The property was held at $16,000.

Dwelling Leased for Restaurant.

The three four-story private dwelling 122 to 126 West Forty-eighth Street have been leased to Carlo Giolito, a restaurateur. Alterations costing about $20,000 will be made.

Mr. Giolito leased Nos. 122 and 124 from Charles L. Moreau and No. 126 from A. S. Wickstrom, for a term of fifteen years from Nov. 1, at a reported yearly net rental of $9,000. The properties occupy a combined site 60 x 100, 100 feet west of the new Friars' Club.

Commercial Lease.

Charles F. Noyes Company leased the store and basement at 197 William Street to Louis Goldstein and the store and basement at 182 Washington Street to Beam Fletcher Corporation.

John Patterson & Co., tailors and importers, leased for a long term the third floor in the Frances Building, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street. The firm, which was founded in 1852, has been located for ten years at 10 East Thirty-third Street. Albert B. Ashforth, Inc., negotiated the lease.

D. Propper, haberdasher, has leased the store at the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and 116th Street, through Marston & Co., from the estate of Peter McGlan.

The Cross & Brown Company leased the store at 237 West Fifty-eighth Street, to the L. & D. Mortors, Inc.

Cammann, Voorhees & Floyd leased the entire building at 184 Water Street to Leo Hirsch; also the store and basement at 48 East Fifty-seventh Street to G. F. Saito, Chinese antiques and porcelains.

Anna Sherman is the buyer of the tenement 136 West 112th Street, sold last week.

In Such Times as These

With the uncertainty as to the future
Investments in stocks, bonds, etc., are precarious.

Two things are absolutely sure—
The growth of New York along Broadway
And the Value of U. S. Government Bonds.

Lots on or near Broadway
Cannot be stolen, burned, confiscated or lost.

They are there all the time
With the City growing up and around them.

In times of stress such as these Lots along Broadway with the neighborhood growing up around them have always proved to be, in the end, the best investment.

People with large or small capital
Think this over.

Examine the 234 lots
To be sold at auction
by a decree of the Supreme Court belonging to the Estate of Jos. Godwin on BROADWAY, 230th St., 231st St. & Kingsbridge Ave.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

INVESTMENT.

An export company now doing a large and very profitable business, with offices in many countries, is increasing its capital stock. The money received therefor is to be used to take care of its increasing business, which is growing beyond all expectations.

In offering this stock to the general public we feel that we are extending an opportunity which is seldom offered to any one not in close touch with financial circles. It is a chance to become associated in business with the highest possible class of New York financial and business men, as our stockholders comprise leading banking and commercial interests. Our present stockholders would take up all of the new issue, but we have good reasons for wishing to scatter it. There are no insiders and no ground floor. Every share of preferred stock goes at the same price, with the same bonus of common.

We will give every opportunity for the fullest investigation as to condition, standing, personnel, &c. The new issue of stock is not large, and we prefer small investors with a minimum of one thousand dollars, with one exception. We can utilize the services in an official capacity of a man who will invest, say, twenty thousand dollars. He must be an experienced, high-grade business man who can furnish, as he will receive, the highest possible references as to integrity, character, and standing.

We tender an investment with practically certain good returns, probably very large ones, and no chances taken except the ordinary, everyday ones of legitimate business. J 327 Times Downtown.

ITALIANS REPULSE MASSED ATTACKS AT MONFENERA

Drive Invaders Back from Four Attempts to Storm the Mountain Stronghold.

FOE CONCENTRATING THERE

Heavy Fighting Continues for the Possession of the Key to the Plains.

BERLIN REPORTS GAINS HELD

Says Strong Italian Assaults Failed to Recapture Positions on Monte Tomba.

ROME, Nov. 20.—The struggle between the Austro-Germans and the Italians on Monte Tomba and Monte Monfenera, in the mountainous region of Northern Italy, continues. It was officially announced today by the Italian War Department. The invading forces were driven back four times when they attempted to take the Italian positions on the Monfenera Spur.

The text of the statement reads:

The struggle begun on the Monte Tomba-Monte Monfenera front Saturday night is continuing fiercely. The enemy four times interrupted the bombardment of our positions on the Monte Monfenera spur to launch his masses against them. Each time our troops, with courage beyond all praise, drove them back.

In the Meletta region (east of Asiago,) our parties yesterday continued the local offensive operations, which on Sunday and Monday altogether gained us 300 prisoners, including six officers, five machine guns, and several hundred rifles.

On the Piave front, on the islet in front of Folina, three machine guns and several rifles were taken.

Our bombarding airplanes repeatedly and effectively bombed enemy columns in movement along the road in the Lower Piave Valley, in the region of Quero. During the night airships dropped several bombs on enemy bivouacs at Torre di Mosto and in the neighborhood of the Motta di Livenza Bridge, which was damaged. Two enemy machines were downed.

Italians Fall on Tombs, Berlin Says.

BERLIN, Nov. 20, (via London.)—Strong Italian counterattacks against positions captured on the northern slope of Monte Tomba, on the mountain front near the Upper Piave, were unsuccessful, the War Office announced this afternoon. Heavy firing continues in this sector.

The text of the afternoon statement follows:

Strong Italian counterattacks against the positions captured by us on the northern slope of Monte Toma led yesterday to desperate fighting. The fire of our artillery and machine guns thinned the ranks of the enemy, who stormed in close masses, and our infantry drove him back into his former positions. Strong firing continues in this fighting sector.

On the Lower Piave there was nothing new to report.

Heavy Fighting in the North.

ITALIAN HEADQUARTERS IN NORTHERN ITALY, Nov. 19, (Delayed.)—The enemy is concentrating his attack on the north, and very heavy fighting is in progress south of Quero, where large enemy masses are attacking the Italian positions on Monte Fenera and Monte Tomba.

VICTORS ON THE PIAVE CAN'T BURY AUSTRIANS

Foe Fires on Stretcher Bearers, Who Leave Hundreds Where They Fell.

By The Associated Press.

ITALIAN HEADQUARTERS IN NORTHERN ITALY, Nov. 19, (Delayed.)—The Associated Press correspondent today made a tour of thirty miles along the Piave battlefront, visiting Zerson, Fagare, and the Sega Mill, where desperate fighting has occurred, and saw the Duke of Aosta, commander of the Third Army, guarding the Piave line, whose men hurled the Austrians into the river and re-established the solidity of the Piave front. At the moment the Duke was issuing an address to his army, congratulating it on its glorious achivement.

An officer from General Staff Headquarters accompanied the correspondent, and, although the headquarters of the Third Army were reached at an early hour, the Duke was coming out to proceed along the front. He held in his hand a war map, which he consulted with his aids before giving directions for the route to be traveled.

It was a striking picture as the Duke stood there studying the map. He is tall, of athletic build, with gray hair and mustache, and face bronzed by exposure. He wore the service uniform of high command, with boots, spurs, and an overcoat edged with black fur. He acknowledged cordially the salutes of the correspondent's party, and a Colonel of his staff explained conditions along the line.

Everywhere, the Colonel said, the enemy had been thrown back except at the brink of the river at Zenson, where a few men were huddled in the bushes, unable to go forward or backward, and were being slowly cut to pieces. At

Burn Venice, Gabriele d'Annunzio Urges, Rather Than Yield It to the Austrians

By PERCEVAL GIBBON.

VENICE, Monday, Nov. 19, (Delayed.)—I had a conversation with Gabriele d'Annunzio, who since the beginning of the war has been in some sense the mouthpiece of his country. Never in modern times of war has a poet had such universal acclaim and recognition as he from the army of which he is a part and the people of whom he is one. He spoke of Piave first.

"It must, henceforth, be the only river in Italy," he said, "only a sweet water at which the Italian may slake his thirst. The Po, the Tiber, even—we must know nothing of them. The Mincio—never heard of it. It is the Piave which is our secret stream, where we must assemble our strength, the power and passion of our resistance, our patriotism and our fate, so that never, never, never shall the enemy cross this new and holy frontier into our holy land. I am going there myself tomorrow, into the very front line. I must plunge both my hands into those waters."

He spoke of the men. He said he had seen wounded men as debonair as the first who had been wounded in the hours of victory; and then he spoke of Venice. It was then one could comprehend the power he wields over his fellow countrymen, for his dilettantism fell from him, and burning passion sounded in his voice.

"Austrians to walk in the piazza of San Marco!" he cried. "I cannot think of it. It is agony! It is the ultimate horror, not alone for the fact of it, but for all that it signifies. It must never be! Now, if ever, we Italians must experience the resurrection of our great qualities. We must make a great and immortal gesture, one which shall thrill the world. Rather than devote those stones to the tread of Austria let us fire the city! Let that beauty, that inspiration, perish in a fire whose glow shall illuminate the pages of your history for all time! Better that than to surrender it!"

The guns are still loud in the distance, and the "All safe" signal of the current raid has not yet been given. War is creeping upon Venice; its fires are burning ever nearer. It is the waters of the Piave that must quench them, and the news that comes hither tonight is good.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The most complete machinery used for the purpose by any nation will be erected by this Government to enforce the President's proclamation to put down destruction of property by enemy influences. It was learned today that President Wilson is firm in the view that one of the most important tasks of the Government at present is to destroy the malign alien influences crippling industry. A force of at least 100,000 men will be needed.

Acting under the President's direct orders, Secretary of War Baker today instructed the Bureau of Militia Affairs that it would be the central organization authorized to execute the plan for watching enemy aliens and enforcing the President's proclamation. These seasoned regular officers are instructed to create a guard to protect the prohibited area around warehouses, piers, and shipping points, and to be the eyes of the nation in the enforcement of the registration of Germans.

Regular army men will be used as guards in some instances, but as far as possible Home Guards, State Constabulary, and municipal police will be employed in guarding the prohibited districts and in enforcing the registration and other provisions of the proclamation. Under the terms of the proclamation the Attorney General is authorized to protect all industries within three miles of a river or navigable stream. In this zone are most of the war industries and shipyards.

States Are Asked for Help.

Secretary of War Baker today instructed Colonel Jesse C. Carter, Acting Chief of the Bureau of Militia Affairs, to confer with State Adjutant Generals and learn how large a force each State can furnish and is willing to contribute. Secretary Baker emphasized the point that the States are not required to furnish such protection, but it is hoped that the different home guard organizations will gladly volunteer and act under Federal direction.

In a letter to Adjutant Generals, Colonel Carter, after calling attention to the President's proclamation and the necessity for prompt and effective carrying out of the regulations, asks these questions:

"What forces are now available in your State for this duty?

"Are there any forces sufficiently strong to do the work effectively?

"What facilities are available for the transportation of State guards?

"What do you see in your State that needs more effective policing?

"What facilities seem to be menaced by an alien population?

"Will there be any objection to having State guards or troops under the direction of the Bureau of Military Affairs?

"Will State guards and State constabularies object to being employed in the enforcement of the President's proclamation?"

In the larger cities the police will be asked to aid in different ways, but it is thought that in New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Jersey, and West Virginia the Home Guards are strong enough and sufficiently well organized to do effective police duty in the enforcement of the proclamation.

It was learned today that one of the first moves to be made in Congress would be the introduction of an amendment to Section 4,067 of the Revised Statutes, which defines as alien enemies males above 14 years of age. Because of the inhibition of this law, the President could not compel the removal of German women from the District of Columbia and the Panama Canal Zone.

It is well recognized that the allies of Germany, not yet recognized as ene-

American Destroyer Chauncey Goes Down In Collision in War Zone; 21 Men Missing

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The American destroyer Chauncey, which has been engaged in naval patrol duty and the U-boat hunt in foreign waters, has been sunk in collision, according to an announcement made by the Navy Department today on the basis of a brief cablegram from Vice Admiral Sims, who said that probably twenty-one lives were lost.

"The Chauncey," said the official announcement, "a small American destroyer on patrol duty in foreign waters, was sunk in a collision early Monday morning. First dispatches indicate that twenty-one lives were lost. Further information will be made public when full reports are received."

The Chauncey was one of the old type of destroyers, completed in 1902, and displaced 420 tons, less than half the displacement of the newer and speedier destroyers now being built. Her complement was ninety-one officers and men.

For several years before the war the Chauncey was used only in coast defense work, and was classified as a coast torpedo vessel. She was built in Philadelphia.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Lord Northcliffe granted me an interview this morning, and the statement which follows herewith is the first cabled with his authority to an American newspaper since his return here.

"There is much interest in the United States in the mention of your name as a possible successor to Lloyd George," I suggested.

"That is mere Fleet Street nonsense," replied Lord Northcliffe. "We have a live wire at the helm. Unfortunately, a good many of the officers of his ship of state are shirt fronts and rubber stamps."

Lord Northcliffe was speaking in the London offices of the British War Mission—a seventeenth century building beneath the great shadow of the tower of the House of Lords, and a very marked contrast to his offices at 681 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and the Munsey Building, Washington. He was lamenting the absence of steam heating and pointing out that after the consumption of 100 pounds of coal in a mediaeval fireplace the temperature of the room had not been raised to 50 degrees.

"The situation in Great Britain," said Lord Northcliffe, "is no better understood in the United States than the American position is here in London. First, realize that not one Englishman in a hundred has any idea of the powers of the President. He is regarded by most Englishmen as the Prime Minister, and our Prime Minister is removable by a single adverse vote in the House of Commons. It is not understood here that the President has supreme authority over the army and navy. Thus, when his hurry-up call came to London yesterday morning in the shape of his message to Colonel House as to the essential needs of an interallied council, only two newspapers in London featured the message, and most of them buried it at the bottom of the column under small two-line heads.

"Do-Nothings" and "Deadheads."

"It is realized that the President is a man of great determination, clarity of vision and fair-mindedness. It has become apparent in the last six months that his character is in marked contrast to the do-nothings and obstructionists in our Cabinet whose inertia compelled me to refuse the high Cabinet position offered me by Lloyd George.

"The situation here is that a number of political back numbers are playing politics. They will not succeed. The other situation is that, with all his virility, vitality, and industry, the Prime Minister, Lloyd George, is not equal to the double task of fighting the enemy abroad and the deadheads of his own Cabinet, who are 'laying down on him.' Sooner or later he must reconstruct his Cabinet.

"The men who really run our Government are Lloyd George, Lord Milner, and General Smuts. Churchill is wiping out his Gallipoli blunder by great activity in shell production. He is proving an excellent Minister of Munitions, and if he does not start interfering with war strategy will eventually regain public confidence.

"The allegations that Lloyd George is plotting against our great Commander in Chief, Sir Douglas Haig, are untrue. The public have supreme confidence in our proved military leader, and would not tolerate interference by any politician, even our Prime Minister himself. I am in favor of a War Council that should meet continually, at which the actual heads of the various armies should be present, not merely representatives, and I believe that Haig, Pershing, Pétain, and Dias should meet at some suitable place in France at least once a week.

"The modern General has no need to be actually with his army in these days of telephones and telegraphs. Haig could just as easily conduct his opera-

STORY OF KERENSKY SUICIDE

And Rumor in Sweden Is That Entente Diplomats Are Leaving City.

RUSSIANS IN FRANCE REBEL

Mutiny, Fomented by Maximalists in May, Put Down by French Cannon.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKHOLM, Nov. 20.—The Tidningen, an important and responsible newspaper here, learns that information has reached Stockholm through diplomatic channels, though not through the Swedish Foreign Office, that Russia's official participation in the war is not far from its ending.

The report is to the effect that the people are utterly tired of war and that Russia must be regarded as standing before an immediate peace.

The foreign legations in Petrograd are said to be protected by Polish soldiers.

A rumor has wide currency in Petrograd that Kerensky shot himself at Pekoff. Another rumor is that the Entente Ambassadors are leaving Petrograd.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 20.—The Berlin correspondent of the National Tidende learns that the German Government has received information by an indirect route that the Russian Maximalist Government has declared Russia out of the war.

The correspondent ascribes his information to a competent source, and later in the dispatch indicates that it was received from a military quarter, where, he says, the belief is now held that the prospects for a "peace of conciliation" are far better than before.

He adds a long statement on the military situation, intended to indicate that the Entente might as well give up all hope of defeating Germany and come to terms with the Central Powers.

The whole dispatch gives the impression of having been carefully prepared officially for the correspondent and may be regarded as a feeler.

Nothing has been heard in usually well informed Danish quarters with regard to the report. A Dane, who, better than most of his countrymen, is in a position to judge the sentiment of both England and Germany, told The Associated Press today that he expected a long continuation of the war.

German Socialists Back Bolsheviki.

Philipp Scheidemann and Friedrich Ebert, German Socialist leaders, before large meetings in Dresden and Elberfeld yesterday, launched a campaign designed to force the German and Austrian Governments to abandon their present plans for annexations under the guise of protectorates over Poland, Lithuania, and the Baltic provinces, and accept the peace offer of the Russian Bolsheviki.

Herr Scheidemann said Germany would be endangered and the proposed general disarament and lasting peace would be placed in jeopardy if Russia should be forced by German pressure to become a military State. He expressed pleasure at the general condemnation which he said was being made manifest within the Central Empires of the plan to make the Austrian Emperor King of Poland and invest the German Emperor with the authority of Duke of Courland and Prince of Lithuania.

Ebert, like Scheidemann, proposed resolutions of solidarity with the Russian Maximalists, and said that German labor must do its duty to force the Government to make an unambiguous, affirmative answer to the proposals of the Bolsheviki.

FRENCH CANNON END RUSSIAN CAMP MUTINY

Muscovites Rebelled Against Allies in May—Were Finally Subdued in September.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—An interesting official report of a mutiny of Russian troops in France has been published by the Provisional Government in the Russian press. Details of the report are reprinted here in the Manchester Guardian.

Soon after the revolution had broken out in Russia there appeared in Paris a number of newspapers of most extreme views. These papers reached the Russian troops in France and there began a frantic Maximalist propaganda, so it was not surprising that serious agitation appeared among the troops which seemed itself in unpleasant hostility toward their officers. Finally a mutiny broke out.

On order of Kerensky, the Minister of War, Commissary Rapp proceeded to the Russian troops on May 18. He reviewed the different units and made some changes in their organization, but the ferment continued none the less. The First Brigade refused to go on manoeuvres, explaining that it was use-

Russia, Minus a Government, Still Goes On; Petrograd Council Proposes National Election

By HAROLD WILLIAMS.

Copyright, 1917, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Monday, Nov. 19.—Life goes on in an unintelligible way, defying bold plots and amazing negations, cheating all prophets and baffling all calculations. Trains still run, the electric light still burns, tradesmen still hand over goods in return for scraps of paper that are called money, and even the postman does his daily round.

There is no Government in Russia yet. Russia still exists by force of habit, by virtue of some common irrefutable, irrational belief. There is bitterness and wrath and futile bloodshed. There is conflict that is furious but diffuse, violent up to within an ace of a decisive point, perpetually and desperately inconclusive. If only one could point to a man or a group and say, "Here is hope of salvation, here is promise of a new day!" But there is no concentration as yet, no visible organizing centre.

I hear Socialists talking gloomily, depressed beyond all measure, contemplating the wreck of all their hopes, bewailing their own errors, loathing their own verbiage, and taking refuge in a lingering instinct of patriotism that for months they have passionately denied. I listen to them, but they proffer now no solution. They are afraid of the Bolsheviki and afraid of a dictatorship, and yet half inclined to make common cause with some of the Bolsheviki even now against the coming dictator wherever and whoever he may be.

Here in Petrograd the City Council have ceased negotiating with the Bolsheviki—who, in fact, never displayed any real willingness to negotiate—and are casting about for some democratic method of checking civil war and tiding over the period of anarchy till some central authority can be established. They proposed summoning a kind of new pre-parliament of representatives of local government bodies, and now they have decided to proceed energetically with the elections to the constituent assembly.

How elections can be held with the country in its present state it is difficult for an outside observer to understand, but the Petrograd City Council thinks if only half the constituencies elect, if only half the Deputies turn up in Petrograd, that, at any rate, will serve as a nucleus for the re-establishment of a central power. It seems a fantastic hope.

And in the meantime the ordinary administrative business of Russia is at a standstill, or rather there is no co-ordinating and directing power, and in default of instructions, local administrators are living on the resources of habit and on their wits. The process of disorganization goes on apace. The problems of food and fuel grow daily more menacing. Further anarchy and starvation loom ahead. It is a matter of continual astonishment that anything or any one works at all, that shops and banks do open, that we can send and receive telegrams, that draymen rise in the morning early and go about their daily work. The Russians are certainly at bottom a most extraordinarily law-abiding people, considering continual opportunity for and provocation to excess.

Outside Petrograd now there is a considerable force of infantry, cavalry, and artillery somewhere between Luga and Gatchina. From all accounts they are against the Bolsheviki, but demand a coalition Socialist Ministry. The Bolsheviki yesterday sent out the Red Guard and soldiers to meet them, but it seems to be doubtful whether there will be any real fighting, for the simple reason that both sides have very obscure notions of who or what to fight for.

As to Kaledines, whom Petrograd Socialists regard as the dreaded coming dictator, only faint rumors filter through as to his actions and plans. It seems tolerably certain that he secured complete control of the Donetz mining area, where he established industrial committees, consisting each of two representatives of the workers, two of employers, and one of the Cossacks. What is known of his methods does not sound excessively dictatorial, and it is said he demands a Constituent Assembly to meet in Moscow.

The problem of Russia's future is now a matter not for speculation but for liveliest imagination, and the probabilities are fantastic. Here one has the impression that the Petrograd period of Russian history has come to an end.

HAIG STARTS DRIVE ON SOMME FRONT

Reports "Satisfactory Results" of Operations Between St. Quentin and the Scarpe.

TAKES CAPTIVES AND BOOTY

Berlin Admits Ground Lost on Roads to Cambrai, but Is Taking 'Counter Measures."

LONDON, Nov. 20.—British forces on the Somme front, between St. Quentin and the Scarpe, carried out a series of attacks early this morning which are described by Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his report issued tonight, as having had "satisfactory results." War material in considerable quantity was captured from the Germans, and a number of prisoners were taken.

Referring to the same operations, the supplementary night report issued in Berlin says that the British "attacked with strong forces and gained ground," adding that the German countermeasures "are in full swing."

The text of the British night bulletin follows:

Soon after daybreak this morning we carried out a series of operations between St. Quentin and the Scarpe. These operations have been conducted with satisfactory results. A considerable quantity of material and a number of prisoners have been taken, but no estimate can yet be given.

The weather has become stormy and wet, rendering action by our aircraft very difficult. The hostile artillery has been active at a number of points on the Ypres battlefront, particularly in the neighborhood of Zonnebeke and Passchendaele.

In his afternoon bulletin Field Marshal Haig said:

Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire troops made a successful raid last night east of Fampoux. In the region of Wytschaete a raiding party of Germans was driven off by our fire.

BERLIN, Nov. 20, (via London.)—The supplementary report from General Headquarters tonight says:

There was lively artillery activity at Poelcappelle and Passchendaele, (Flanders.)

In the region between the roads leading from Bapaume and Peronne toward Cambrai, the British attacked with strong forces and gained ground. Our countermeasures are in full swing.

The afternoon report from Berlin laid stress upon the increasing intensity of PARIS, Nov. 20.—The Chamber of Deputies this evening gave a vote of confidence to M. Clemenceau, the new Premier, by 418 to 65.

M. Clemenceau read to the Chamber the Ministerial declaration which had been decided upon by the new Cabinet. In the Senate the document was read by Louis Nail, the Minister of Justice. The declaration was as follows:

"We have accepted places in the Government in order to conduct the war with redoubled effort, for the better application of all our energies. We come before you with the sole idea of an integral war.

"We would like that the confidence which we shall ask you to give us be your own conscientious action, and we appeal to the historic virtues that exist in us French. Never did France feel so clearly the need to live and develop in the idea of force placed at the service of the human conscience—in the resolve progressively to advance the right, both as among individuals and as between peoples capable of establishing their liberties.

"'Conquer that justice may prevail'—that is the watchword of all our Governments since the beginning of the war. That program, open as the sky, we shall maintain.

PREMIER'S PLEA TO MISSION

Says Allies' Welfare Depends Upon Early Supply of Vessels.

ASKS ALL TROOPS POSSIBLE

Asserts Russian Collapse and Italian Reverses Make Need Still More Imperative.

SEVERE FOOD RESTRICTIONS

Will Be Imposed in Britain Soon —Counts Heavily on Aircraft.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Addressing members of the American War Mission and his followers among the leading representatives of the British Government at a historic conference held in Downing Street today on the prosecution of the war, Premier Lloyd George emphasized the importance of the American shipbuilding and military programs.

The Prime Minister told the mission that the collapse of Russia and the reverses to Italy "made it even more imperative than before that the United States send as many troops as possible across the Atlantic as early as it can."

The Premier said he wished to recognize the eager earnestness with which the people of the United States were throwing themselves into the great task. He expressed absolute confidence that the great democracies now marching shoulder to shoulder would utterly overthrow the menace which threatened the liberty of the world.

In opening his speech, the Prime Minister said:

"It is a source of great satisfaction to my colleagues and myself that this gathering of two nations, now equally dedicated to the common task of defending the liberties of the world, should take place in the very room in which the statesmen of an earlier and less enlightened period committed the blunders which had estranged them.

"This conference is a business gathering—the culmination of hard, patient, unobstrusive work done between the members of the mission and the various British departments. Its purpose is to determine how the United States can best co-operate with Great Britain and the other Allies.

"Like Britain, the United States is a pacific power and, therefore, has had to build up a war organization from the start. In doing so she can learn from many mistakes which Britain made. Two of the most urgent matters today are man power on the fronts and shipping.

Send Troops as Soon as Possible.

"The collapse of Russia and the recent reverses of Italy make it even more imperative than before that the United States should send as many troops as possible across the Atlantic as early as possible. I am anxious to know how soon the first million men can be expected in France."

The Premier explained that British shipping was now wholly employed in war work, partly for the Allies, partly on the British account, and added:

"Assuming that the submarine situation gets no worse, the easing of the position of the Allies depends entirely upon the dates on which the American program for the launching of the 6,000,000 tons of shipping, promised for 1918, comes into practical effect. I have no doubt that with the largest industrial resources of the world, a most highly trained and adaptable industrial population, and an exceptional national gift of organization, the accomplishment of America in the matter of shipbuilding will astonish everybody."

Dealing with the airplane situation, the Premier said:

"Command of the air in the battle line is almost as essential as command of the sea. The people of the United States possess to an unusual degree qualities of enterprise and daring necessary to the creation of successful airmen. The American climate also lends itself to the development of the air service, because it is clearer and more equable than the climate of the British Isles. This is of special value, because the training of pilots, the creation of flying units, and the building of airdromes are as essential to the creation of an air service as the building of airplanes themselves."

Referring to food, the Premier said that the Allies were becoming increasingly dependent upon what the North American Continent could produce, and economize in the use of food. He assured the mission that the most drastic restrictions were about to be imposed upon the people of the British Isles, partly in order to assist the Allies, partly in order to leave more room for the carriage of men and munitions to the battle fronts. The Premier said that he regarded the tightening of the blockade as of next importance.

"Close co-operation between the United States and the powers of Western Europe can bring still greater economic pressure to bear on the Central Powers during the war," he said.

The Premier then thanked the mission for the great services rendered by the United States Navy.

Benson Speaks for America.

In reply, Admiral Benson, on behalf of the mission, said that the mission was learning many lessons from the Allies. He expressed the gratitude of its members for the manner with which all sources of information had been thrown open to them.

"The United States is heart and soul in the war," he said, "and the country absolutely indorses the statement of President Wilson that none of its resources would be spared, its men and ships, or work, in order to win the war."

Admiral Benson then gave the conference information as to what the United States had done and was doing, not only in training armies, in building fleets, and in the manufacture of munitions, but in food economy and the construction of aircraft.

Practical Results Achieved.

The Premier's speech opened the discussion, which, beginning about noon, continued for an hour and a half. The session, of course, was behind closed doors. At the close one of the conferees said that a spirit of the greatest earnestness and unity permeated the meeting and that the most important practical results were achieved.

The American representatives present included General Tasker H. Bliss, Chief of Staff; Admiral William S. Benson, Chief of Naval Operations; Thomas Nelson Perkins, member of the Priority Board; Dr. Alonzo Taylor, representing the Food Controller; Bainbridge Colby of the United States Shipping Board, Oscar T. Crosby, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Vance McCormick, Chairman of the War Trade Board. Colonel E. M. House, head of the mission, was not present. His secretary, Gordon Auchincloss, represented him.

The British representatives were Premier Lloyd George, Foreign Minister Balfour, Viscount Milner, George Nicoll Barnes, and Earl Curzon of Kedleston, constituting the War Cabinet; Lord Reading and Lord Northcliffe; the Earl of Derby, General Sir William R. Robertson and Lieut. Gen. Jan C. Smuts, representing the army; Sir Eric Geddes and Admiral Sir John R. Jellicoe, representing the navy, and Major John L. Baird, Baron Rhondda, Lord Robert Cecil, Walter Hume Long, and Dr. Christopher Addison, representing, respectively, aviation, food, blockade, petroleum, and munitions.

None of the numerous allied war councils of the last three years occasioned so much interest as today's meeting. The scene was the dingy old residence in Downing Street which has served the Prime Ministers of many generations as both home and office, and the room was the Council Chamber, where the cabinets met and where the destinies of the empire have been shaped since the days of the American Revolution. The general work of the meeting constituted the taking of stock of the resources and needs of both countries, and, to some extent, of the continental allies.

Lord Reading was the first to arrive. He had a five-minute chat with Premier Lloyd George and then prepared to greet the distinguished men from America and the British participants. Some of these came on foot and others in motors driven by khaki-clad chauffeurs. There was no demonstration by the sightseers, only a small group to whom the time of the meeting was known being present. These, with the reporters and a battery of newspaper and War Office photographers, however, crowded together in Downing Street to catch a glimpse of the conferees.

Admiral Jellicoe, Chief of the Naval Staff, arrived with Sir Eric Campbell Geddes, First Lord of the Admiralty. They were accompanied by a six-foot bricklayer carrying dispatches. Lord Robert Cecil, the Minister of Blockade, walked unaccompanied from the Foreign Office. The crowds displayed deep interest in General Tasker H. Bliss, Chief of Staff of the American Army, and Admiral William S. Benson, who arrived separately with their aids.

Cablegram to House Confirmed.

In the course of the conference the members had frequent recourse to the mass of statistics and official documents at their command. There was little formality about the proceedings. Lord Reading, the Lord Chief Justice, started them by explaining the purpose of the meeting. The discussion that followed was general.

Chancellor Bonar Law said in the House of Commons today, in response to a question, that the British Government had information quite officially that President Wilson had sent a cablegram asking Colonel House and General Bliss to attend the first meeting of the Inter-allied War Council.

The text of the question, submitted by William M. R. Pringle, Liberal, follows:

"Whether the Government has received any intimation from the Government of the United States to the effect that President Wilson asked Colonel House and General Bliss to attend the Supreme War Council which is to take place at the end of the month, and that President Wilson had cabled to Colonel House that the Government of the United States considered unity of plan and control between all the Allies essential; whether a statement to this effect in the press yesterday was issued by authority of the Government; whether Mr. Bonar Law's attention has been called to the message from Washington published this morning, in which it was stated that President Wilson denied he had sent a cable in the terms quoted, and whether in these circumstances the Government could make an authoritative statement on the matter."

To this question the Chancellor replied:

"President Wilson selected Colonel House to take part not only in the Inter-allied Conference but in the Supreme War Council, with General Bliss as his military adviser. There ought to be no misunderstanding. We have that information quite officially."

Hopes America Will Take Charge.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—William M. R. Pringle, Liberal, who, in the House of Commons today, put the question to Bonar Law concerning President Wilson's unity telegram to Colonel House, referred to the same subject in a speech in the House last night, criticising Premier Lloyd George's statement. Mr. Pringle's words, as reported in the official Parliamentary debates, were:

"I maintain that, however valuable in many ways the initiative and imagination and enterprise of Lloyd George may be to this country, nevertheless on all questions of high statesmanship he has been a false guide, and it is because he is a false guide that the sooner this Government falls the better for the country.

"There is only one ray of hope in all this. I notice with great pleasure in the press this morning that in a message President Wilson asked Colonel House to join this Allied Council, and that he has suggested that the American Chief of Staff should join it, with a view to securing unity of control.

"Lord Northcliffe said one illuminating thing in his recent notorious letter. That was that probably America would take charge later on, in view of the way in which the war had been managed in this country. I say, in God's name, let America do so! It will be a good thing for this country, a good thing for Europe, and a good thing for the world if America does take charge, because if America takes charge of the war you will see it managed on somewhat different lines from those to which we have become accustomed during the last twelve months, and we shall see what is even more important and what I believe will contribute more than anything else to the good of the world, an American peace."

MET IN HISTORIC ROOM.

Scene in Council Chamber as Americans and British Conferred.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—It was in the historic chamber where the decisions that led the American colonies into revolution were taken and at the very table at which the draft of the Stamp Act was approved that the chosen delegates of the United States met today members of the War Cabinet of Great Britain and conferred freely with them upon the share each country could contribute to the great fight for liberty.

The Americans were welcomed by the Premier in a short speech referring felicitously to the historic character of the gathering and to the memories that room called up. After a reply from Admiral Benson expressing the determination of the United States to continue the fight for the right to the end, the meeting settled down to business.

The Cabinet meeting room is behind the Premier's official residence, 10 Downing Street. It is a plain, unpretentious chamber, in size about 35 by 20 feet, looking out on the Premier's garden, now almost completely filled by a temporary office building for his secretaries. The main feature of the room is a long mahogany council table, around which every British Cabinet has sat for at least 200 years.

The Premier today took an armchair at the middle of one side of the council table, and was flanked by members of the War Cabinet—leading Ministers such as Balfour, Derby, Geddes, and Rhondda, and such important officials as Robertson, Jellicoe, Reading, and Northcliffe. On the other side the members of the American Mission were ranged. Colonel House was absent, as this was a meeting to consider business details, not the political situation, so Admiral Benson faced Lloyd George, with his colleagues on either side of him.

All around the room, except where the windows gave on the garden, were bookshelves laden with heavy calf-bound folios of "Statutes at Large," but the books were almost hidden by a multiplicity of war maps from every part of the world. Only one picture relieved the room, a fine portrait of Sir Francis Bacon, which hung over the fireplace.

After the preliminary speeches, the War Cabinet withdrew, and Lord Reading took over the Chairmanship. The meeting took the shape of informal conferences between groups composed of American and British representatives interested in the same subjects.

CALL LLOYD GEORGE VICTOR.

Even Opposing Newspapers Concede Strength of Premier's Speech.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The reception of Premier Lloyd George's speech of yesterday in the House of Commons by the morning newspapers justifies the assumption that the storm which lately threatened a crisis has passed, not only without damaging the Premier's hold on the country, but perhaps even strengthening it. It is conceded, even by his opponents, that the speech was in the Premier's best manner and was a parliamentary triumph. Editorial encomiums flow freely from his supporters, while the comments of hostile critics lack the fierceness of previous denunciation.

The Daily News, which has been hostile to the Premier, says that his reply concerning the military council contrasted startlingly with his Paris speech, and asks, if the council is only to be a body concerning which everybody is agreed, what reason there was for the sensational talk in Paris.

The Morning Post, another critic, objects again to the Premier's proposal. It says it may not work for unity, but for division and paralysis, which result from a conflict of expert opinion. It says that it was ingenuous for Premier Lloyd George to plead that he wished in Paris to shock everybody into a sense of reality, but that the soldiers know the terrible reality too well.

The Graphic says the speech failed entirely to clear up the situation, and wonders why the tone of the Paris speech was one of utmost gloom while the speech in the House was marked by almost exaggerated optimism.

Other editorials hail the Premier as a victor. The Daily Telegraph says he won, hands down, adding:

"No movement against a Government in our time ever perhaps was so completely defeated in a single speech."

The Daily Chronicle congratulated Premier Lloyd George on the effectiveness and vigor of his defense. It says:

"Outside critics overreach themselves. They should take a lesson from Mr. Asquith in abstaining from malice and irrelevance in criticism."

"The Premier achieved a great personal triumph," says The Times, "and also completely vindicated to the satisfaction of the House of Commons the essential soundness in its broad principles of the scheme for a closer union of the Allies."

The Times, nevertheless, adheres to the opinion that parts of his Paris speech were dangerous, but thinks that the reasons the Premier gave for them are undeniably weighty.

The Daily Mail congratulates the Premier on his "brilliant success," and wishes that all upon whom he relies for co-operation and support were as resolute and energetic as Lloyd George himself.

The Daily Express says that the speech demonstrated that Premier Lloyd George is the inevitable head of the nation in this hour of trial, and urges him now "to rid the ship of state of the barnacles still clinging to it."

WARNS BRITISH ABOUT FOOD.

Must Save or Undergo Rationing, Controller Rhondda Says.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Baron Rhondda, Food Controller, in a speech in the House of Lords today, said he was still hopeful that compulsory rationing could be avoided, but that it must come unless in the approaching few weeks the public fully responded to the appeals for voluntary rationing.

"There is no fear whatever of famine," said Baron Rhondda, "but the country might have to endure a scarcity."

The Controller said that the Allies would not lose the war through submarines. He was sanguine that there would be the necessary tonnage to provide the necessary supplies.

The situation as regards food stocks, Baron Rhondda continued, was generally better than at this time last year, but the country now had to supply France and Italy. If it were only a question of supplying Great Britain, he said he thought compulsory rationing would be needless.

LET FRENCHMAN LEAD, SAYS WHITNEY WARREN

Wants the Allies to Accept a Generalissimo Who Will Wage a Vigorous Offensive.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 20.—The following article by Whitney Warren is printed this morning in Premier Clémenceau's paper, L'Homme Libre:

"There is no problem at the present hour more urgent than that of a unified command. To solve it all the statesmen in power in all the Entente countries must devote their whole energy. Everywhere public opinion now fully realizes the importance of this question, and Governments are never so sure to be right as when their policy is based on untrammeled popular instinct.

"Common sense declares that Germany's successes are due to the unity of direction that she has been able to impose on her allies. The real strength of the Central Empires lies in the dominating brain of Hindenburg, and that superiority alone has hitherto sufficed to avert every peril of the most critical hours.

"The value of the Entente trumps has always been weakened by the lack of a guiding hand to co-ordinate and lead their game. Where is this hand to be found? Obviously, from a military viewpoint, none has the right to set itself up over France. Neither England, America, nor Italy is qualified to put forward its knowledge of war's science, and more especially its experience in this war, in comparison with that of the nation that has had the habit of victory throughout the centuries.

"It is simple logic that bids the Allies intrust to France the task of leading their armies in the supreme struggle. A French leader ought to apportion to each his part and lay out the lines of a plan that will insure Germany's defeat.

"We must hesitate no longer. It would be a crime against humanity to hearken to the voice of national pride and to compromise the common success by petty considerations of national precedence. To the German generalissimo, the head of the enemy coalition, we must oppose a French generalissimo, the head of the armies of the Entente. Any less vigorous arrangement is doomed to failure.

"It is not for me to name the proposed leader. All that I may say is that he ought to be inspired by the spirit of offensive. That is the price to be paid for breaking the German line. That such a line can be broken has just been proved on the Italian front.

"Too long has the theory of economic victory prejudiced that of military victory. To save bloodshed there has been a wish to stick to a military defensive and leave to the blockade the task of forcing Germany to ask for peace. The result has been to allow Germany to strike where she pleased and to profit from the weaknesses which so wide and varied a front as that of the Allies is bound to offer.

"I still repeat what I have repeated in vain for the last six months. If unity of command had existed and if the desire to find a favorable point for a common offensive had been the guiding thought of a single generalissimo, the French, English, and Italians would today be at Trieste and Laibach.

"That would not have prevented the blockade from tightening and from weakening the enemy's resources day by day. The truth appears clearly. The formula of 'a military defense and an economic offensive' must be replaced by that of a 'military and economic offensive.' Otherwise it means that peace is more distant with all that that implies of wasted blood and accumulated ruin.

"Nor must we take a military offensive on land alone. There is the sea also—that huge front on which no decisive attack has yet been tried. There, too, we need a unified command which naturally should be intrusted to England. It will be the English task to co-ordinate the sea forces of Britain, America, France, and Italy, and to strike a decisive blow at the enemy coasts, either in the North or in the Adriatic.

"As for the economic offensive, why not intrust its direction to the United States? They possess all the elements needed to carry it through to a successful issue.

"In conclusion, what must be done is to replace the triumvirate born from the meeting at Rapello by a council formed of a single head of land, a single head of naval, and a single head of economic operations. From the working together of these three—one Frenchman, one Englishman, and one American—should come speedy victory and peace.

"If the Italian retreat could lead to some such co-ordination of effort when the world's destiny is at stake, then that retreat would prove to have been a blessing instead of a disaster."

BRITISH CASUALTIES HIGHER

32,227 for a Week, an Increase of More Than 7,000.

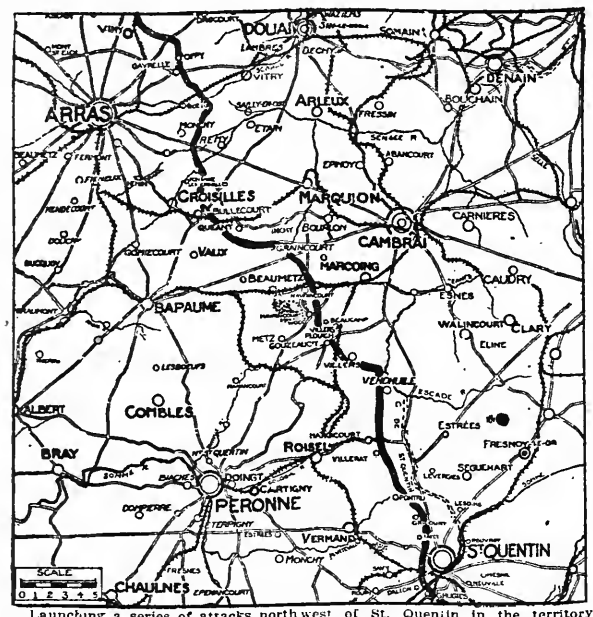
LONDON, Nov. 20.—British casualties reported in the week ending today reached a total of 32,227. They were divided as follows:

Killed or died of wounds: Officers, 296; men, 6,160.

Wounded or missing: Officers, 923; men, 24,848.

The British casualty lists have been increasing recently, probably in consequence of the bitter fighting in Flanders. Last week they were 25,065, and in the preceding week 21,891.

Scene of New British Thrust Toward Cambrai



Launching a series of attacks north west of St. Quentin in the territory between that city and the Scarpe River, Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig today obtained what he describes as "satisfactory results." The heavy black line represents the battlefront in this sector, in which for a long time there have been no major operations.

the artillery fighting on the Flanders front, saying:

Army Group of Prince Rupprecht—The artillery duel in Flanders increased considerably yesterday afternoon from Houthoulst Wood to Zandvoorde, continuing throughout the night with undiminished violence. A strong and destructive fire was directed in the region of Poelcappelle and Passchendaele.

Active fighting also was revived in the Artois, on both sides of the Scarpe and near Bullecourt and Quennt. Enemy reconnoitring detachments were repulsed in hand-to-hand fighting.

GERMANS RUSH MEN AND GUNS TO FLANDERS

Holland and Denmark Report Big Transfers of Troops, Presumably From Russia.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—A telegram from Maestricht, Holland, to Amsterdam, as forwarded by the Central News, reports a great movement of troops with artillery on all roads leading to the Flanders front. These troops are believed to have come from the Russian front.

A dispatch from Copenhagen says:

"Reports from several sources in Germany bear out the assumption that, taking advantage of the situation in Russia, the German Government is making heavy transfers of troops from the Russian front. Only part of them appear to be going to Italy, where the front is too narrow to permit of the use of great masses, and a blow by von Hindenburg at some other point, in the way of diversion, may perhaps be expected.

"Some troops are reported to have been moved to the western front, but this is not necessarily significant, as Field Marshal Haig's pounding tactics make necessary frequent reliefs for exhausted German divisions.

"German newspapers discuss with suspicious frankness and avidity the prospect of an offensive on the Saloniki front, but have never a word to say about the obvious chance of a smashing blow at Rumania in an effort to end the resistance of that nation. As for Italy, if the Austrians and Germans find the reinforced Italian Army too hard a nut to attempt to crack, the Central Powers can easily and quickly change to the defensive on a strong line for the purpose of seeking to force a decision on some other selected front with the bulk of their strategic reserve."

GERMAN THRUST AT VERDUN.

Small Gains Near Caurieres Mostly Lost When French Counterattack.

PARIS, Nov. 20.—The Germans made an attack last night on a front of one kilometer in the Verdun sector north of Caurières Wood. They succeeded in penetrating the French advanced positions over a small extent of this front, says this afternoon's official statement, but subsequently were expelled for the most part.

Following is the text of the afternoon report:

North of St. Quentin we easily repulsed a raid in the region of Fayet. In Champagne there was rather heavy artillery fighting in the sector of Butte du Mesnil.

On the right bank of the Meuse, (Verdun sector,) after an intense bombardment of the front between Bezonvaux and Chaume Wood, the Germans attacked our positions north of Caurières Wood over an extent of about one kilometer. The attack was broken by our fire, and the Germans were not able to approach our advanced lines except over a very small space. Enemy troops which succeeded in gaining a footing were ejected for the greater part by an immediate counterattack.

In Lorraine an enemy raid on our positions south of Norroy was without success. Elsewhere the night was calm.

The communication issued by the War Office this evening says:

The artillery fighting has been rather violent in Belgium and in some sectors to the north of the Chemin des Dames, and also on the right bank of the Meuse.

Violent German gunfire on the Yser is reported in the Belgian official communication, issued at Havre. It reads:

During the day of the 19th we silenced several German batteries. The enemy directed his artillery fire especially in the direction of Merckem and Hoekske. During the night and the day of the 20th inst. the artillery activity on both sides was less than on the previous day. To the north of the Yser the enemy's bombardment has been violent in the region of Mercka. Aschhoop and Hoekske. Our batteries replied vigorously, and shelled the enemy's defense works.

A German airplane was brought down in flames this morning in the direction of Dixmude.

BERLIN, Nov. 20, (via London.)—The War Office reports the collapse, with heavy loss, of a French attack yesterday upon German positions in Chaume Wood.

Following is the text of the afternoon statement:

Army Group of the German Crown Prince.—North of Soissons and on the eastern bank of the Meuse (Verdun front) there was a considerable increase in the firing, followed by an attack by a French battalion against Chaume Wood. It was repulsed with heavy losses, prisoners being taken. Preparations which the enemy made in his positions several times in the evening for an attack were shattered by our destructive fire. Enterprises by German detachments north and east of Verdun were successful.

MANY REPORTED SHOT IN BERLIN RIOTING

Police Volleys Dispersed Sunday Meetings of Socialists, Amsterdam Hears.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Serious rioting took place in Berlin last Sunday, according to dispatches received by the Wireless Press and the Exchange Telegraph Company from Amsterdam.

The message to the Exchange Telegraph Company says that the fighting between the mob and the police was very fierce, and that there was a heavy casualty list, as the police used their firearms.

The Wireless Press says the military and police were called upon to oppose the progress of the Independent Socialist demonstrators. In the riotous scenes which followed the police were forced to fire with their rifles and revolvers, and the organizers of the meeting responded with firearms and knives.

The German press, the dispatches say, has been forbidden to publish details of the affray. No newspapers have arrived in Amsterdam from Berlin in the last few days.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 20.—The Independent Socialists tried to hold meetings in Berlin on Sunday, despite the Government prohibition against them. Afterward a small number of the Socialists held demonstrations in the streets in Eastern Berlin, but were dispersed without difficulty by the police.

REPORTS U-BOAT SUNK.

Letter Says Attack on Maryland Battery's Transport Failed.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 20.—A letter received here from one of the members of the 117th French Mortar Battery, formerly the Coast Artillery, Maryland National Guard, says that after being followed by two submarines, one of which is believed to have been sunk in a brief engagement with United States destroyers, the transport bearing the 185 men of the battery, arrived safely at a French port.

The U-boat, it is said, was sent to the bottom soon after the transport entered the war zone, and a second submarine, after witnessing the destruction of her sister craft, disappeared. Part of the convoy gave chase, but the U-boat eluded her pursuers.

The battery arrived first at an English port, and was then whisked to a port on the English Channel, where it boarded a transport, arriving in France Oct. 31. The entire trip took thirteen days.

"Uncle Sam certainly gets his men off in a hurry," says the letter. "We were notified one morning at 1 o'clock to get up without making any noise and pack up our belongings. Twelve hours later we were en our way to France."

M'ADOO PROPOSED NEW WAR COUNCIL

tions from Paris as from his present place behind the Allies.

"President Wilson should have the support of the whole world in insisting upon allied co-ordination. It is now no secret that at the suggestion of Secretary McAdoo, André Tardieu and I worked on this plan for months. It ought to have been put in hand long ago. Had it been organized at the time desired by Mr. McAdoo I believe that the Italian disaster might have been averted.

"The present system of running the war would ruin even the Steel Corporation in about four weeks. The present system of running the war ignores the vital factor of war time.

"When I think of the time wasted between those hot mornings in Washington, when Mr. McAdoo was pressing for this conference, and these cold Winter days in London, I feel a good deal more than angry.

"War is, of course, not an exact science of business. It is the most difficult of all human propositions. Success in war goes to the side that makes the least mistakes, but success in this war never will come until the board of war directors meets like any other board of directors.

"I have come back to England after five months in America (five months in which I made many new friendships and renewed many old ones—five months in which my average of travel was over 100 miles a day) to find the resolute spirit of England what it always has been in every phase of its history.

"We have seized every industry in this country—the railways, the mines, the shipyards. No private building is allowed. There are no private automobiles on the roads except those which by the most ingenious arrangement are now run by coal gas. The first time I saw one of these cars coming along I thought it had a Zeppelin on top, so large is the gas reservoir.

"Food is sufficient here and bread is cheaper than in New York, because in the matter of flour our Government has subsidized it to the extent of $200,000,000 a year.

"There are no men doing women's work. The women of the country are engaged in making guns, bombs, and bullets. All the elevators are run by women. They operate the street cars and subways to an immense extent. They have increased the output of England. They and the men who are working longer hours do much more than double what it was before the war.

"Remember, at this moment we are financing the allies to a larger extent than you are—a fact very little known in the United States. Remember that not one dollar lent to England, so freely advertised in your newspapers, crosses the Atlantic. Every cent is spent in Bridgeport, Cleveland, Detroit or some other busy centre. Our loans to our allies are made without any stipulation as to where the money should be spent.

"Would you through THE NEW YORK TIMES kindly thank my friends not only in the East but also in the Middle West and Canada for a thousand acts of kindness to the British war mission and to me in particular? Would you also, whose guest I was to have been on Nov. 10, thank the Lotos Club for keeping the secret of my departure?

"I have no intention whatever of joining a Government constituted on the lines of our present administration. I have every intention at the termination of the allied conferences of returning to New York and Washington to proceed with the work which among such happy and helpful British and American colleagues I have engaged in for so many months there—that of hastening food and munitions across the Atlantic.

"When I return, I shall devote my attention particularly to aircraft. I am of those who believe that the war will be largely won in the air and that the resources of the United States should be mainly devoted at the present moment to the building of ships and the construction of bombing airplanes with which the Allies can blast their way into Germany."

MUTINY OF RUSSIAN TROOPS IN FRANCE

less to go through exercises when they had decided not to fight any more.

Later a dispute between the First and Second Brigades threatened to develop into a bitter conflict. The soldiers of the Second Brigade insisted on being separated from the mutineers of the First Brigade and threatened to leave the camp if their demands were not conceded. That is why General Zankevitch, arriving with Commissary Rapp, ordered the soldiers who obeyed the Provisional Government to leave La Courtine Camp, taking their equipment with them. This order was executed June 25, and only those soldiers who refused to obey the Government remained in camp.

The extremely malevolent attitude of these men to their officers obliged General Zankevitch to remove the officers from the camp, and he left there only a few men who were charged to look after its administration. On Rapp's initiative political envoys visited La Courtine camp several times in order to bring the soldiers to a better view of things, but all their efforts were in vain. Even MM. Roussanof, Goldenberg, Erlich, and Smirnof, delegates of the Soviet, were received with hostility.

Finally General Zankevitch was advised from Petrograd that it was not intended to bring back to Russia the troops stationed in France, and that it was urgent that order should be re-established among them, even if it was necessary to have recourse to armed force. He went to La Courtine and posted a notice to this effect, enjoining the troops to put down their arms and to go to Clairvaux. This order was obeyed by only 2,500 men, who left La Courtine. The others, 8,600 in number, refused to obey.

Then further measures were resorted to in order to bring the mutineers to their senses. Their rations were reduced to a suitable allowance, and their pay was suppressed. French sentries barred the roads leading to the neighboring town. Such measures dismayed the rebels, but at the same time they only increased the influence of the agitators scattered among them. They assaulted the French soldiers. They kept under arrest for six hours a French officer and two non-commissioned officers who had been ordered by the French authorities to post in the camp a telegram from the Generalissimo.

On Aug. 19 General Zankevitch made a final appeal to them to put down their arms, but in vain. On Sept. 1 their provisions were stopped, but they had taken care to prepare a big reserve for this contingency. The next day Russian artillery took up allotted positions and an ultimatum was delivered to the Camp Committee under threat to open fire on the camp if they did not lay down their arms before 10 A. M. on Sept. 2.

No notice was taken of the order, and in due course the artillery opened fire. The rebels were warned that the fire would be intensified if they continued to resist. In the night 160 men gave themselves up. On Sept. 3 after about thirty shells had been dropped on the camp, the rebels waved white flags and came out, throwing own their arms. By evening 8,300 had given in. They were taken in charge by French troops.

On Sept 5 an intense artillery fire was opened on the camp. The mutineers, of whom 140 still remained, replied with violent machine gunfire, but by Sept. 3 the whole camp was occupied.

The Russian losses were eight killed and forty-four wounded. The French casualties were one killed and one wounded. Of the Russian loyal troops one was killed and five wounded. In course of disarming the rebels eighty-one arrests were made. Then the rest were formed up in battalions, two of which, composed of the most agitated elements, were sent to Bourg and the other to the Isle of Aix. The others will remain at La Courtine until the end of the inquiry ordered by the Provisional Government.

A copy of a telegram sent to Kerensky by Russian soldiers in France, in which they expressed confidence in him and urged him to fight the extremists, was received in Washington on Nov. 13. In their message these troops pledged themselves to respond to any call Kerensky might make upon them and urged him to deal pitilessly with the Bolsheviki and secret counterrevolutionists. The telegram concluded: "You are the only guarantee for our safety; be firm and pitiless toward the enemies of Russia."

SAYS NORTHCLIFFE UTTERED CALUMNY

Carson Resents Charge of Inefficiency Made Against British Management of War.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Sir Edward Carson, in a speech in London today defending the military and naval leaders from recent attacks, and characterizing the agitation as a "sham crisis," attacked Lord Northcliffe. He said:

"In the midst of these attacks a great man—a superman, if you like—comes to tell us that, in contrast with America, we are so inefficient that America will have to take over the management of the war. I have a great admiration for this great man, but I think that it is a great calumny upon his fellow-citizens and I know it is not the view of Americans.

"I have had the honor of meeting many members of the American Mission, and they are lost in astonishment and amazement at the organization and the effort put forward by Great Britain. I have searched the official reports, and this great man, so far as I can see, has never made one single suggestion since the war began from his seat in Parliament, when he can be criticised.

"I attended a historic meeting in Downing Street today. America has shaken hands with England across the Atlantic. We are in the war together to the end, and will see it through."

REPORT KERENSKY WITH TWO ARMY CORPS

Petrograd Hears He Is at Luga—Brusiloff Wounded at Moscow —Navy Conference Called.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Petrograd advices dated yesterday say that two army corps loyal to the Committee for the Salvation of the Revolution, stationed at Luga, report that Premier Kerensky is with them. There is no confirmation.

Vladimir Furlabkevich, a former member of the Duma, who led in the attack on German influence in the Russian Army and the "dark forces" shortly before Emperor Nicholas was dethroned, has been arrested today on the charge of being at the head of a monarchist plot. With him at the hotel in which he was living under an assumed name was Prince Youssoupoff, who figured in the assassination of the monk, Rasputin.

General Alexis Brusiloff, former Commander in Chief of the Russian Armies, has been wounded in the leg by a shell which struck his house in the course of the recent fighting in Moscow. The telegram announcing the injury to the Russian officer was filed at Moscow on Saturday, and it adds that the Kremlin and other historic buildings there are practically intact.

An official Russian dispatch received by wireless here today says a congress is to be held in Petrograd to consider questions relating to the navy. The dispatch follows:

"To all Central Committees of the Navy: To bring about a timely meeting of the congress of the navy, we suggest that all measures be taken such as will enable the delegates to be present in Petrograd on Nov. 28. One delegate should be sent from each 500 electors, as indicated. Thus we must secure a solution of the essential questions which have to be introduced in legal manner into the life of the navy of the great Russian Republic.

"(Signed) Naval and Military Revolutionary Committee of all the Russian Navy."

PRESIDENT HOLDS UP SUPPLIES FOR RUSSIA

To More Shipments to be Made While Bolsheviki Remain in Control.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—No shipments of supplies will be permitted to go from the United States to Russia until the situation in that country clears. The American Government, before allowing the export of goods already on the docks, wants to know into whose hands they will fall on their arrival.

The cessation of shipments is temporary only if a stable Government is formed which the United States can recognize. If the Bolsheviki gain control and pursue their program calling for a peace with Germany, the embargo will be permanent. A protracted civil war also would work to keep the embargo tight, as the United States then would fear that supplies might go to the Bolsheviki faction.

Credits given to the Provisional Russian Government amounted in all to $325,000,000, of which $191,000,000 already has been advanced. Much of this money has been spent for supplies now awaiting shipment, and vessels have been furnished for its transport. Shipment will be held up by denial of bunker coal to the ships.

General Kaledines, the Cossack leader, is described in dispatches received at the State Department today from Swedish sources as "the man of the hour." He is said to be holding Petrograd at his mercy as regards food, and is expected to take possession of the capital shortly.

Confirmation of General Kaledines's ascendency also came to the department from Consul Smith at Tiflis, who reported his marching on Voronesh with a large force of Cossacks. Voronesh is approximately 300 miles south of Petrograd. If Kaledines gains control of the railroads rapid advance on the capital may be possible.

The only definite official information received by the State Department from Russia today was that John F. Stevens, head of the American Railway Mission, was on his way to Vladivostok in connection with his work. He had been reported in Moscow. No advices came direct from Ambassador Francis during the day.

'NOTHING BUT WAR,' PLEDGE TO FRANCE

immortal native land, in the noble ambitions of peace, will pursue the course of its destinies.

"Those Frenchmen whom we were constrained to throw into the battle have claims upon us. Their desire is that none of our thoughts turn away from them, that none of our acts be foreign to their interests. We owe them everything, without any reserve—everything for France, bleeding in her glory; everything for the exaltation of right triumphant.

"The single, simple duty is to stand by the soldier, live, suffer, and fight with him; renounce everything that is not of the Fatherland. The hour has come for us to be solely French, and with pride to declare that that suffices for us.

"Let everything today be blended—the claims of the front and the duty in the rear. Let every zone be the zone of war. If there must be men who find in their souls impulses of the old times, let us put them aside. All civilized nations are engaged in the same battle against the modern development of ancient barbarity. Against this, with all our good allies, we are an immovable rock, a barrier that shall not be passed.

"Let only fraternal solidarity, the surest foundation of the world to come, be shown at the forefront of the alliance, at every instant and everywhere. In the field of ideas France has suffered for everything that makes man firm. In her hope, drawn from the sources of the purest humanity, she consents to suffer still for the defense of the soil of her great ancestors, with the hope of opening ever wider, to men as to peoples, all the doors of life. The force of the French soul is in that. That is what animates our people while they work as well as while they fight.

"Those silent soldiers of the workshops, deaf to evil suggestions, those old peasants bent over their land, those robust women at their toil, those children who bring them aid—there are our 'poilus,' who, thinking later on of the great work, may say like those of the trenches, 'I was in it.'

"With those also we must remain steadfast, we must see to it that, stripping ourselves for the fatherland, we one day may be loved. To love each other, it is not sufficient to say so, we must prove it. We would like to try to give that proof and we ask you to aid us. Can there be a finer program of government?

No More "Treason Nor Semi-Treason."

"There have been mistakes. Let us think only of repairing them. Alas, there have been crimes also—crimes against France. Let them receive prompt chastisement. We take before you, before the country that demands justice, an engagement that justice shall be done according to the rigors of the law.

"Neither personal consideration nor political ardor will turn us from our duty or lead us to go beyond it. Too many criminal attempts have already resulted on our battle front in the shedding of a superabundance of French blood. Weakness would be complicity.

"We shall be without violence. All the accused before court-martials—that is our policy, the soldier in the pretorium in solidarity with the soldier in combat. No more pacifist campaigns, no more German intrigues. Neither treason nor semi-treason. War—nothing but war!

"Our armies shall not be taken between two fires. Justice is on the way. The country will know that it is defended and is a France forever free.

"We have paid too great a price for our liberties to cede any part of them beyond the need of preventing divulgations and excitations from which the enemy might profit. A censorship shall be maintained for diplomatic and military information, as well as for those susceptible of disturbing peace at home, up to the limits of respect for opinions. A press bureau will give advice, nothing but advice, to all who solicit it.

"In war time, as in time of peace, liberty is to be exercised under the personal responsibility of the writer. Outside of that rule there is only arbitrary anarchy.

New Regime of Sacrifice.

"It has not seemed to us necessary to say more under the present circumstances to indicate the character of this Government. Days will follow days, problems will follow problems, we shall march in step with you to the realizations that the necessities impose. We are under your control. The question of confidence will be continually in the balance.

"We are going to enter upon a régime of restrictions after the example of England, Italy, and America, admirable in her ardor. We shall ask of each citizen that he take his full part in the common defense, that he give more and consent to receive less. There is abnegation in the army. So let abnegation exist throughout the country.

"We shall not forge a greater France without putting our life into it. Something of our savings is asked besides. If the action that concludes this session is favorable to us, we expect of it consecration.

"In the complete success of our war loan is to be found supreme evidence of the confidence that France owes to herself when she is asked for victory. Some day, from Paris to the humblest village, shouts of acclamation will greet our victorious standards stained with blood and tears and torn by shells—magnificent apparition of our noble dead. That day, the greatest day of our race, after so many other days of grandeur, it is in our power to bring forth."

Premier Clemenceau read his declaration in a firm, clear, voice. When he spoke of France's debt to the dead, his emotion was evidenced by the trembling of the sheets in his hand. His peroration was acclaimed by the whole Chamber with the exception of certain of the unified Socialists.

Three Deputies of the Right later withdrew their interpellations on the scandals which are now being investigated.

a story from real life

SYSTEM, being a magazine of business, of course prints no romances. But it creates many in real life. Here is one:

J. F. Moore of Texas ran a store for 18 years and made only a bare living. No matter how many sales he put on, how much he advertised, nor what he sold, profits stayed down.

Then he ran across a SYSTEM article on store methods, based on data from 1,562 successful stores. One thing in the article struck him: The best of these stores did their buying of new goods strictly according to what past sales indicated as safe. He never did. He always bought on guess and hope. This habit, he perceived, was the gulf into which his profits went.

From that moment he began to make money. "Had I seen this analysis earlier," he writes, "I would have been thousands of dollars ahead." His letter stops there. Yet it is a romance, lacking only the tag "they all lived happy ever after" to make it complete.

HAIL DRY WEATHER ON AMERICAN FRONT

Alert Troops Now Devote All Their Energies to Causing Enemy Casualties.

GERMAN DOG FINDS A HOME

Goes to Pershing Trenches and Is Adopted—Brisk Exchanges of Artillery Fire.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Nov. 20, (by The Associated Press.)—The American artillery and infantry at the front are dry once more, the rain having ceased for several days.

The correspondents visiting the immediate front through the courtesy of the French staff found that the Americans had taken advantage of the rainless weather and were devoting all their energies to changing, as they put it, "Germans into casualties." They are on their toes every minute and are not letting a single opportunity slip to drop a shell or to send machine gun and rifle bullets where the enemy is seen, or where he even is suspected of being.

There is no doubt that the men like the life they are living. They are as cool and methodical as if they had been doing nothing else than fighting throughout their lives.

The fine group in the first line trenches had just sat down to their salmon sandwiches and coffee when they jumped up and cut loose with their automatic rifles at Germans who were discovered hanging out clothes on a wire in a battered village. They saw the enemy dive for cover like rabbits and then they went on with their meal as if nothing had happened.

This particular section of France's long battle front in the earth does not absorb water like a sponge, as in some other localities. There has been no rain for three days, so the ground is fairly dry. The uniforms of the men show evidences of where mud once had been, but that is all.

From the first line trenches, which are on a hill, the German first line can be seen between 500 and 1,000 yards away. There was something in the German first line once which will never go back to Germany. It is a wooly dog which deserted the enemy, crossed No Man's Land, and bounded into an American trench one dark night recently. He licked the hand of an American "doughboy," and was promptly fed with a piece of white bread and a handful of Columbia River salmon. He was thereupon adopted, and now roams all around the trenches, and even walks upon the parapet and through the barbed wire entanglements as if there were no war.

"This pup," said one of the soldiers, "is a naturalized American, and there is no hyphen about him. He has entirely forgotten all his boche connections. I hope he gets a chance to bite the Kaiser."

As the correspondents approached the trench lines over the shell-pitted ground the enemy started breaking shrapnel over the first line. This firing lasted only a brief time, stopping as suddenly as it began. Immediately afterward came detonations from the rear and the whiz of shells overhead suddenly began appearing over the German trenches. The infantrymen looked cautiously over No Man's Land while the firing was going on, but as soon as it was over they appeared to forget all about it.

In a nearby dugout the men off duty had not even heard the racket. Their principal worry seemed to be rats. One occupant of the dugout explained that there was sleeping room in it for thirty-eight men, and that twelve cats were kept in it. Cats were everywhere, some sleeping on tattered blankets and some prowling in dark corners or stalking their prey.

The men all appeared to be in the best of health, although during the wet and cold weather of previous days several men in this unit had contracted "trench feet" and colds.

While the sun was going down behind the hills and the darkness was coming on swiftly, scarcely a shot was fired. Just as the sun passed below the horizon, however, the German batteries opened up on one of the American battery positions with a hot fire, the high explosives bursting with the regularity of the clock tick—about one every second. The bombardment lasted a couple of minutes, and then ended abruptly. Immediately the American batteries retaliated, flashes of orange-colored flame stabbing the night. The detonations—some heavy and some light—continued for some time with as much speed as the Germans had shown. Then, the "strafing" and the answer being over, the artillery settled down for the night of usual quiet.

AMERICAN OFFICERS UNDER SHRAPNEL FIRE

Shell Falls in Headquarters Near the Front—Another Kills One Soldier and Wounds Three.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Nov. 20. (By The Associated Press.)—A German shell fell through the roof of the château in which an American regimental headquarters is established near the front yesterday. The shell exploded, but no one was hurt. Several officers, including the American Colonel in command of the regiment, were in the building at the time.

Two other shells exploded near by. An American Brigadier General had a narrow escape in the same town, an earlier shell exploding and scattering stones and mud on his automobile. The Germans are especially active in shelling the roads. A burst of shrapnel over a group of American soldiers eating supper at the roadside killed one and wounded three.

The German fire at points back of the American positions is most active. The shells fall very rapidly at times. The American artillery replies energetically, sending shrapnel at the enemy trenches and high explosive shells at his batteries.

Active patrolling continues. Four American patrols on a recent night remained for hours in front of the enemy line, hoping to ambush Germans, but none appeared.

FREIGHT EMBARGO IMPOSED.

Pennsylvania Order Affects Lines East of Pittsburgh.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 2.—The Pennsylvania Railroad announced today that it had placed an embargo on freight originating on all lines east of Pittsburgh, as well as on all freight originating on connecting lines destined for points on or by way of the Western Pennsylvania Division.

The Western Pennsylvania Division embraces the main line and branches from Altoona to Pittsburgh. An unprecedented congestion existed in that part of the system, the company stated. The embargo will be lifted as soon as conditions warrant, but relief is not now in sight. Government freight and food are not embargoed. Neither are coal for by-product ovens, coke for blast furnaces and limestone, which are necessary to keep the industries of the Pittsburgh district running.

BRITAIN WARNS PACIFISTS.

Will Withdraw Passports of Those Attending Conference at Berne.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—Great Britain has not only decided not to issue passports to any one desiring to attend the so-called peace conference in Switzerland but, it was stated today, the Government will also consider the withdrawal of passports from any British subject, resident in Switzerland, who may attend the conference.

SPAIN WARNS OUR AIRMEN.

Military Will Fire On Any That Fly Over Her Territory.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—A Madrid dispatch says the Spanish Government has issued a special warning that Spain would regard any flight of American airplanes over her territories as in violation of neutrality, and would instruct the military to fire on such airplanes.

ALL DISLOYAL MEN WARNED BY GREGORY

Criminal Courts Will Handle Their Cases, Says the Attorney General.

LINCOLN STATUES NEEDED

Those That Resemble President, Says Mr. Grescom, Should Be Sent to All Our Allies.

United States Attorney General Thomas W. Gregory sounded a warning to the disloyal elements in America during his speech last night at the Lincoln Memorial University dinner, Mr. Gregory, after asserting the fact that 95 per cent of the men in this country today would die as willingly for their beliefs as the men of 1776, said that he would warn the other 5 per cent. against any manifestation of disloyalty.

"Our message will be delivered to them through the criminal courts all over the land," he said. "And may God have mercy on them, for they need expect none from an outraged people and an avenging Government."

Mr. Gregory was the principal speaker at the dinner, at which were some of the foremost business and professional men of New York. After he had finished speaking, Francis Grescom, who knew Abraham Lincoln personally and who was present during several of the famous Douglas-Lincoln debates, delivered an address in which he bitterly criticised the present delusion concerning the appearance of Lincoln which would have the emancipator portrayed as "looking like an imbecile and feeling like a dyspeptic." After Mr. Grescom's speech ex-United States Senator Charles A. Towne of Minnesota offered a resolution which was adopted, calling upon the Chancellor of Lincoln University, Dr. John Wesley Hill, to undertake arrangements to have "correct statues of Lincoln, neither adding nor detracting to his real appearance," put in all the capitals of the "nations now allied together in defense of democracy."

Mr. Gregory, after discussing the character of Lincoln, and pointing out our martyred President's insistence on the maintainance of law, took up the opposite character of the Hohenzollern Emperor William of Germany, and from that proceeded to a biter arraignment of the German nation, its history, and its ideals.

"Each bit of stolen property," he said, "has been made to yield its conqueror footroom. Never has the German Empire developed colonies. It has always sprung upon people weaker in a military sense, but its equal in every conception of civilization. I challenge Germany to point to one instance where she has cultivated the waste places, one instance where she has civilized an uncivilized people.

"And now for the first time across the path of this outlaw nation falls the shadow of the giant of the west, the Republic of the United States. Before we went to war the German Government had torn down one by one every safeguard we had erected about us. It allowed the rule of war, no principle of civilization, no ideal of humanity to stay its hands. It sank our ships, broke down our factories, plotted to embroil us with our neighbors, and even tried to foment rebellion among our own citizens. Germany drowned our helpless women and babes, and then proclaimed a national holiday so that her own children could celebrate the wholesale murder. And, finally, she decreed that the only right she allowed to Americans on the sea was to die.

"What our fathers suffered, gentlemen, was child's play to what we endured before we went to war. And now I know that 95 per cent. of the men of the United States will give their lives as freely in 1917 as in 1776. I will not speak of them, but I would address the other 5 per cent. of disloyal persons and moral and physical degenerates who believe nothing is worth fighting for.

"Let me say to them," the speaker continued, his voice ringing clear in the hush that greeted his words, "let me say to them to lock that thought in their hearts, and throw the key away forever. To all the disloyal in this country a message will be sounded which they can understand through the criminal courts. May God have mercy on them for they need expect none from an outraged people and an avenging Government."

Attorney General Gregory then took up what he termed the other 95 per cent. who were loyal. Those whose fathers had died to preserve the liberties of the nation would fight for it, he knew, and also others who fathers had been allowed to find an asylum here.

"And now let me say one more thing," he continued. "There is no more insidious thought in this country than the belief that this war will soon be over. The end is not in sight. Whatever happens, the power of Germany must be broken and must be broken on the western front. And we are coming to the battle. Our President has sent his ringing message across the ocean to our gallant allies, England and France, telling them to 'Hold the fort,' for we are coming. And we are coming, 1,000,000, 3,000,000, 10,000,000, until our cause is won."

Mr. Grescom launched at once into a disgussion of the conception of Lincoln, which aroused the discussion on the statue to be placed in London.

"Lincoln, as I saw him in the last great debate with Douglas at Alton," he said, "presented a wonderful difference between assumed dignity and dignity imparted by the grace of God. Lincoln as we saw him then was simple, calm, and unaffected. His face was stamped with the serenity that implies power without fear and wisdom without folly. For this reason, it is not permissible to depict a genial giant as one restrained by meekness, hampered by humility, and rendered tractable by adversity and opposition.

"The time is at hands when a statue of Lincoln as he looked should be sent to London and to all our other allies."

Among the other speakers were Bourke Cockran, Martin Littleton, Hamilton Holt, editor of The Independent, and Dr. John Wesley Hill.

ASK WRIT AGAINST EX-CZAR.

Transportation Men in Suit Assert He Has Millions Here.

Before Supreme Court Justice Benedict in Brooklyn it was disclosed yesterday that Nicholas Romanoff, deposed Czar of Russia, has a fortune of several millions of dollars deposited or invested in New York City. The fact came to light when the Marine Transportation Service Corporation, which is suing the former Czar and the Russian Government, asked and obtained from Justice Benedict a writ of attachment for the property.

The corporation asks $2,800,000 as damages for an alleged breach of contract. According to a statement made by Bernard Naumberg, counsel for the plaintiff, the corporation had a contract in 1915 with the Russian Government to carry supplies to Russia. It is alleged that after the goods were placed aboard ship in this country the Russian Government refused to pay for them. The transportation company, seeking to make good its losses from property owned by the former Czar here, declares that he has bank deposits and personal property in this State amounting to "several millions of dollars."

MEDIE'S DESTROYER SUNK.

Another Vessel in Convoy Hit U-Boat While Steamer Was Sinking.

PARIS, Nov. 20.—A German submarine was destroyed at the time the French steamship Medie, with a cargo of munitions, was torpedoed in the Western Mediterranean on Sept. 23, with a loss of 250 lives, says a dispatch from Algiers to the Journal. The liner Biskra was proceeding with a convoy of French and British steamers, among which was the Medie, leading the line. The Medie was torpedoed without warning before she was able to bring her guns to bear on the submarine.

Apparently thinking that the ships were not armed, the submarine commander brought his boat slowly to the surface. The Biskra immediately opened fire at a distance of two miles. The second shot struck the submarine forward and low. An explosion followed. The submarine's stern shot up. The U-boat plunged to destruction before the Medie disappeared.

GERMAN DIPLOMATS GO UNDER SAFE CONDUCT

Party of 68 From Orient Leave American Port — Suspect Is Arrested at Pier.

A liner which has sailed from an American port, with passengers of all classes, most of whom were going abroad for the holidays, had among those in the first cabin sixty-eight German and Austrian diplomatic and consular officials from the Far East and the South Sea Islands, accompanied by the wives and families. They were traveling home under safe conducts granted by the Allies. Among the members of the party were Baron von Rosthern, recently Austro-Hungarian Minister to China, and Dr. S. Barthelme, who was ordered to be deported from the United States recently.

Every precaution was taken to see that no German spies got away on the ship among the passengers or crew. There were about 100 Secret Service agents, officials from the Navy and Army Intelligence Departments, immigration inspectors, customs guards, detectives, and a special squad of Department of Justice officials from Washington on hand. The liner was searched five times from the upper crow's nest to the keelson and a quantity of mail was discovered which was being smuggled through to Germany. Part of the letters and papers were apparently of no importance, the Customs officials said, but others, which have been held for examination today may have some matters of importance contained in them.

A detective who was on duty at the gangway of the steamship to examine passengers saw a man whom he suspected going on board, and stopped him to look at his papers. As the man's baggage had not been marked by the Customs Inspectors on the pier, and he looked like a German, the Lieutenant ordered the baggage to be taken to one of the cabins for inspection. The man had a cabin passage ticket and a Russian passport, and said he was Kasper Wrede, 27 years old, single, a native of Finland. He told the Government officials that he was an aviator, and had been giving exhibitions in flying at various cities in the United States for the last six years. He was now going home to see his family in Finland, and hoped to make exhibition flights there if the revolution was over when he arrived. His headquarters in this country, Wrede explained, was at a small town near Cleveland, the name of which he had forgotten for the moment.

When the Customs Inspectors searched his clothing they found a 38-calibre automatic revolver in the inner pocket of his sack coat, with a number of cartridges. In a valise they found six spare parts of airplanes and several pieces of steel tubing which Wrede said were parts of the uprights of an airplane. Several papers were found in his possession, which will be examined and translated before he is brought up for examination before the Federal authorities. In the meantime the man was locked up for the night, and his baggage was taken to the Custom House. In the arrest of Wrede the authorities believe they have a good find, and hope to discover the identity of the persons who are carrying on a secret correspondence with Germany.

Another liner has also sailed from an American port with passengers who are going to spend the Christmas and New Year holidays with their relatives abroad.

DUNKIRK CITED FOR HEROISM

"May You Ever Be a Model to the Nation," Said French Premier.

The City of Dunkirk has been cited in an order to the French Army for the heroism of its people in enduring the frequent bombardments. The order, as printed in the Echo de Paris of Oct. 19, reads:

"The City of Dunkirk, subject for the past three years to violent and frequent bombardments, has, thanks to the admirable calmness and courage of its valiant population, maintained and developed, for the national defense, its economic existence and thus rendered to the army and to the country inappreciable services.

"Heroic city! May you ever be a model to the entire nation!

When first we introduced Hand-Tailoring the big ready-for-service shops were frankly astonished at our prices.

They naturally conceded the Superiority of hand-workmanship—not publicly, but privately, not in their advertisements, but in their hearts—but they could not understand our ability to sell Hand-Tailored Clothes at machine-made prices.

Obviously, Hand-Tailoring costs more, so it is a natural conclusion that we are doing finer work and getting less money for it.

VICTORS ON PIAVE CANNOT BURY FOE

Fagare, Follina, and the Sega Mill the rout of the enemy was complete, having been accomplished in fearful hand-to-hand fighting on Friday night and Saturday.

D'Aosta's Greeting to Victors.

The officer showed a copy of the Duke's address to his men. It is an inspiring document, breathing encouragement and confidence. it says, in part:

"Soldiers of the Third Army: The enemy has attempted to pass our defenses on the Piave, but his audacity has met with defeat before your heroic lines, and he is driven back, leaving in our hands a great number of prisoners and machine guns. My soldiers, your commander greets you at the moment of this glorious exploit, and conveys to you the grateful acknowledgement of the country. With you rests the victory. With all our hearts we join our efforts for the country, for liberty."

The tour along the front took the party to the very centres of the hardest fighting and along the edge of the inundated region, where the countryside was transformed suddenly into an inland sea. Approaching the battle front, the party passed the brigade mentioned by General Diaz, Commander in Chief, for its furious assault at Zenson. It was just back from the front line, and the men still wore their helmets. Many of them were not more than 20 years old. They were sturdy country boys, and marched along seemingly unconscious of their glory.

At the barracks they were counting Austrian rifles and guns gathered in the court. The line of captured machine guns looked like a collection of huge black grasshoppers. The bayonets were detachable bowie knives, with two-edged blades.

General Euherent of the famous Bersaglieri Brigade, which carried the day, came out to greet the party. He is a short, stocky man of resolute bearing.

Sand Bar Strewn with Corpses.

On the cemetery road, where the Austrians advanced and set up their line of quick firers, a fearful scene was spread before the party. The road was littered as though a tornado had passed by. Dead horses lay all about in contorted shapes. The highway was strewn with enemy helmets, blood-stained clothing, cartridge belts, and all kinds of accoutrements. The trees on either side were cut in two, and the lines of bushes were leveled like grain before a storm.

Just ahead on the road was Sega Mill, where the bloodiest fighting was centred. The mill wheel was still running, and the water was flowing peacefully, but all about were evidences of fearful carnage. The soldiers who held the mill stood unconcernedly at the door, while all over the ground were tatters left by the Austrians as they were driven on the mill and thrown into the river.

Passing on to the bank of the river, just back of the mill, a horrible sight opened just under the eyes of the visitors. Over there on the sand bar in midstream lay corpses in heaps, as far as the eye could see, the uniforms showing plainly that they were Austrians. Some lay on the bank, and some floated in the water. The Italians had just buried the bodies of 200 Austrians, but those other hundreds could not be brought back for decent burial, as the Austrian guns cut down stretcher bearers every time they went off toward the sand bar. An officer's dead horse, with saddle and rich saddle cloth, lay among the bodies.

The gruesome line of bodies extended far down the river. The Austrians had been cut down by machine-gun fire as though by a scythe. All the men in the line pitched forward on their faces and lay there, as though on dress parade, but prostrate.

Going on to Zenson, the little town could be seen to have been retaken by the Italians after the enemy had obtained a brief lodgment in it. Behind the town on the river edge are bushes. Here were huddled what remained of the first enemy storming party which crossed the river. The whole place was swept by fire, and one realized the fearful furnace these men were in.

As the party passed the inundated region the tops of cornstalks could be seen above the long stretches of water, indicating that it was about five feet deep. Similar traces of vineyards could be seen above the flood. Soldiers of the Engineer Corps were along the banks of the canal. They had opened the sluices wide, and the water was up to the sills. The harvest had been gathered, but there can be no planting or sowing there next Spring.

BATTLE ON TOMBA CRITICAL.

Holding of Piave Line Depends Upon Italians' Success at That Point.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The turning point has been reached in the battle of the Piave River.

Upon the result of the furious fighting that has been in progress along the Monte Tomba line, in the mountain section between the Piave and Brenta Rivers, will probably depend the decision as to whether the Italian stand is to be continued along the Piave or abandoned in favor of a strategic retreat toward the Adige.

For the first time since the Austro-German forces burst through the Julian Alps and turned the left flank of the Isonzo line a twenty-four hour period has passed without any yielding of the Italian defensive line. The enemy has been cleared from the west bank of the lower Piave, and that front is solidly held. The mountain front in the north also appears to be standing firm, with furious fighting around the northern slopes of Monte Tomba.

The loss of Monte Tomba by the Italians would threaten the whole Italian line along the plains section of the Piave. This mountain is in the last high ridge of the Monte Grappa Plateau, between the Piave and the Brenta, and between the higher Alps and the plains that slope southward toward Venice and the sea.

This ridge starts at Fenera, a point on the middle Piave River, several miles south of Quero, and runs southwest toward the Brenta, ending several miles north of Bassano, an important strategic point where the Brenta emerges from the mountains in the plain. The highest point in the ridge is Monte Grappa, 5,683 feet high, about half way between the Brenta and the Piave, the peaks of the mountain range east and west of Monte Grappa in this ridge becoming gradually lower until the river edges are met.

South of this is a road extending in a valley highway running the full distance between the Piava and the Brenta, and is excellent road is the present objective of the Germans, since its possession would give them good routes toward Bassano on the Brenta and the west bank of the Piava south of Fenera.

The question of the ability of the Italians on the north front to make as successful a stand there as did the army of the Duke d'Aosta along the lower Piave, by delaying the flanking forces of the enemy armies several days, is a vitally important one.

Diaz Praises Youthful Recruits.

An official dispatch from Rome received today says:

"Commander in Chief Diaz ordered the following message to be distributed to his troops:

"'The young soldiers of the class of 1899 have received the baptism of fire. On the river which today bars the enemy from the roads leading further into the motherland they have conducted themselves magnificently. Their ardent enthusiasm, coupled with the experience of older companions, triumphed over the enemy.

"'Some Austrian battalions which had dared to cross the Piave have met their fate. Twelve hundred prisoners were taken, and some guns, which had fallen into the hands of the invaders, have been recaptured and brought again by our soldiers to the positions marked by the bodies of the artillerymen, who remained at their post of duty to the very end.

"'In this supreme hour of duty and honor, in which the army, with firm faith and strong heart keeps the enemy back on the river and on the mountains, the entire army should know that our young soldiers have proved to be worthy of the glory and traditions of their regiments.'

"The enemy airplanes continue to throw to our soldiers pamphlets in which they express their benevolent disposition toward the invaded towns and the populations, also assuring the soldiers that the Austrians have a scrupulous respect for international law, and that the present occupation of our territories is only temporary in character, without aims of conquest.

"This system has the immediate purpose of weakening the fighting spirit of the Italians, trying to make them feel that there is no need for fighting longer if the invaded regions are going to be returned without further sacrifice on their part. To the enemy's snare the Italian soldiers will reply with redoubled ardor in the fight.

"After a religious ceremony which took place in the Cathedral of Milan, Cardinal Ferrari delivered a strong appeal to the congregation, exhorting them to have faith in the complete and not distant victory of the allied arms. Later the Cardinal received French soldiers and distributed personal souvenirs among them."

ITALIAN ARDITI HEROES OF THE PIAVE BATTLE

Daredevil 'Candidates for Death' Routed Hungarians Who Crossed at Zenson.

By PERCEVAL GIBBON.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WITH THE ITALIAN ARMY, Monday, Nov. 19, (Delayed.)—Only a few days ago people were talking of the Piave, as previously they had talked of the Tagliamento, as a line on which gallantry would fail, and where hopes were vain; but already on the sectors of the river the Italian resistance has hardened into a dogged and dangerous defensive, and the men who fought their way back from the Carso are holding their ground and counter-attacking.

One such sector, among others, is that which embraces the region from a point just south of San Sona di Piave, where the Austrians threw their first bridge across, to that other point just north of the Treviso-Oderzo Railway bridge, where another crossing was made and the land on the right of the river penetrated by the enemy as far west as the small hamlet of Fagare. Zenson, the scene of yet another crossing, is included in this zone, which is now garrisoned on the Italian side by that famous corps which formerly held the northern Carso line from Faiti to Castagnevizza, and that other corps which was General Diaz's command in the Third Army.

The ground on the west bank of the river here, on which the enemy established a footing, was widest at Fagare, while their most formidable thrust was at Zenson, where, it will be remembered, they had made an effort to create a regular bridgehead.

Further south still where they were in contact with the naval forces they had pressed to the line of the Sile River and occupied all that bay of marshes which extends to Porto di Cortellazzo, on the Adriatic.

There is, perhaps, nothing so disorderly as a forced retreat, unless it be an advance in pursuit, and there is reason to think that the Austrians have not recovered their organization and full fighting efficiency as quickly as the Italians have regained their capacity for active defense. I wrote at the time of the character of the retreat, of its masterly decision, and of the success of the Third and Fourth Armies in withdrawing in the face of immense difficulties.

Now that the armies have come to a standstill, the tale of that retreat begins to complete itself, and we learn in more ample detail of the means by which the Austro-German advance was hampered, and the Italian rear shepherded to safety.

Among the fighting elements which took a glorious part in it three are conspicuous—the cavalry, the armored cars, and the Bersaglieri cyclists. Of the divisions of cavalry which took part all suffered heavily. Apart from their dismounted work, they managed to charge again and again with sabre and lance. One regiment of light horse actually charged upon the Austrians, who had prepared to receive them with machine guns, and, despite their losses, charged the guns, and say that at the last minute the Austrian machine gunners left their weapons and ran as the horsemen bowled down on them.

The armored cars lived through a series of private epics at crossroads, spending hours and sometimes whole days motionless, their crews keeping a ceaseless, weary lookout through the loopholes in the turrets. Three of them thus engaged discovered that they had been cut off, and made their way at sixty miles an hour through the main streets of three villages occupied by the enemy and got well away.

The crew of another relate that, having been without food for two days, they shot a calf with their machine gun and carried it off to where they could cook it without interruption. Another, having delayed too long, neared the Tagliamento Bridge so late that it was blown up before they were actually off it, and their car was hurled along by the impact of the explosion.

Each was in contact with the enemy a hundred times, spraying him with machine-gun bullets, dodging his cavalry and slowing his advance.

The cyclists were those who fought from house to house through one village after another. There was not left a bridge or culvert unbroken. Engineers and airplanes co-operated to make the enemy's path a succession of traps.

Continuous Fighting Near Zenson.

On the sector of the Piave which I have mentioned the fighting has been continuous since the first enemy crossed near Zenson. It is like the first days of a new war here, where conditions are yet primitive, and the men have not yet acquired the art of making themselves comfortable. The resemblance holds also in the attitude of the men. They have that debonair quality, that daredevil touch which belongs rather to new troops than to these hard-bitten veterans.

In the last two days of fighting they have retaken the ground around Fagare and pinned the enemy to the very edge of the river at Zenson. Fargare, of course, is a huddle or ruins, and Zenson has suffered considerably from Austrian shelling. Musile, likewise, where the former bridge crossed to San Dona, has been partly burned; but San Dona itself, on the further bank of the river, shows at a little distance only small traces of damage. Beyond it there are still campanili to be seen, although the airplanes report that a number of other campanili have been destroyed.

"Candidates for Death."

The fighting near Zenson, which took shape on Saturday, was particularly violent. The enemy forces consisted of a number of battalions of Hungarians and Dalmatians, not previously identified, and the Italian troops included the Gredadiers, the Catania Infantry Brigade, and the Twenty-first Battalion of those special troops, volunteers for sheer fighting and specially for storming duties, who are called "Arditi." They wear a special uniform—a gray sweater and a short double-breasted jacket—and are trained in a fashion that weeds out any but the strongest and most resolute.

When last I saw them practising the storming of a hill beyond Udine, mountain guns were dropping real shells just over them, and Maxims and trench mortars were turning the affair into the most real test I had ever beheld. Every man of them is a highly schooled specialist in every weapon, from bare hands to flame-projector. Few live long, and there is never any lack of volunteers to take their places. They speak of themselves jestingly as "aspiranti cadaveri" (candidates for death.)

It was these, who have never ceased to resent and question the retreat, who led the storming column upon the enemy's lines at Zenson. There was a brief bombardment, and then the Arditi rushed the parapet. The Hungarians fought well for a while, but there was no standing against that attack. There was some active slaughtering, both in the assault and while the enemy fell back to the river.

The Austrian's losses in killed left on the field were exceedingly heavy, and their cramped position along the bend of the river now hinders their getting further forces across.

Everywhere the Italian resistance is gallant and stubborn, although everywhere the enemy pressure is increased.

FAYOLLE OFF TO ITALY.

Commander of the French Reinforcements Starts for the Front.

PARIS, Nov. 20.—General Marie Fayolle, commander of the French forces in Italy, departed last night to take up his duties. General Fayolle is an artilleryman. He was retired six weeks before the war began, but offered his services and received a command. He served under General Petain at Carency in 1915, and afterward was promoted and placed in command of the Sixth Army. He conducted the operations on the Somme which resulted in the retreat of the Germans to the Hindenburg line. He then took command of the central group of armies. It was under him that General Guillaumat finished clearing the approaches to Verdun.

General Fayolle has a reputation as a scientific soldier, earned largely while he was a professor at the War School.

GREEK FLAG OVER UDINE.

Indication That Constantine's Partisans Are Aiding the Invaders.

ITALIAN HEADQUARTERS IN NORTHERN ITALY, Nov. 18, (Delayed.)—Information is trickling across the Piave from the Italians in Eastern Venetia, now overrun by the enemy. According to these reports, Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary has visited Gorizia and Udine, and King Ferdinand of Bulgaria has passed through Gradisca and Palmanova.

The garrison at Udine, the former Italian headquarters, is said to be made up of Turkish soldiers who are using the Church of Santa Maria as one of their barracks. On the citadel of Udine the invaders have raised five flags—Austrian, German, Bulgarian, Turkish, and Greek. The last flag represents the Greek division which went over to the Bulgarians at Kavala and Fort Rupel, and which some reports put among the enemy divisions operating on the Italian front.

Early, in September, 1916, the Fourth Greek Army Corps, with headquarters at Kavala, surrendered to the Bulgarians. Its strength was reported to be 25,000 men, and these were later transported to Germany.

SUFFRAGE LEADERS CALL FOR REPRISAL

President of the Anti-Suffrage Association made that charge she forgot the support of the President, the Governor, and other men of unquestioned loyalty and of the great established political parties.

Tribute to the Pioneers.

Mrs. Whitehouse paid tribute to the pioneers of the suffrage cause as the most real contributors to the victory, and introduced Governor Whitman as "a man of little faith—a man who was a bad prophet, but a good friend."

The Governor congratulated the State on the "patriotic addition to the electorate of New York," and said there was no longer any such thing as an anti-suffrage party or a suffrage party. "That question," he declared, "has been settled once for all." Mr. Whitman declared it the duty of all women to vote, whether or not they had sought the franchise, and said he never had been concerned as much with the need of women for the vote as with the need of the State for their votes.

Woman's place always had been in the home, he said, amid much laughter, and so had man's, and the woman who did not make a success of her home was not likely to render any very great service to the world outside, and the man who was a failure at home was likely to resemble a failure elsewhere. The speaker concluded by returning to his theme that the attitude of public men on suffrage should not be made the test of their fitness for office, asserting: "I would not insult your intelligence by asking your support because we supported you."

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, the next speaker, drew tears as she recounted the devotion of forty of her seventy years to the struggle for "enfranchisement and freedom." Several times the audience gave her rising greetings, and all over the house furtive handkerchiefs appeared as her voice faltered.

"If, as they claim, the Socialists did it," said Dr. Shaw, "then they have done a splendid thing. If it was the Democrats, they are beginning to understand the principles of democracy. If it was the Republicans, the Republicans are beginning to know what a representative government is."

She pleaded for a pilgrimage to Congress, that should voice not a threat, but a plea, and went on:

"We have pledged our co-operation until all women of the nation, like ourselves, are free, and the best method by which it can be secured is by making a concerted drive on Congress this Winter to show the men there the earnestness, the sincerity, and the desire of the women of this country that they may now lay down their arms in the struggle for suffrage—that they may devote themselves, body and soul, without any restrictions whatever—without any consciousness of ingratitude on the part of the Government whatever, that they may devote themselves solely to carrying on the needs of our Government during this terrible war. We must give every power we possess of body and mind and heart."

Colonel Roosevelt, although the last speaker, received the most enthusiastic greeting of the evening and was vigorously applauded as he told of the patriotic activities of members of his own family, and received sympathetic laughter when he offered to go without milk and butter that the children—and grandchildren—might have enough. In part Colonel Roosevelt said:

"Tonight I wish in greeting you first to exchange congratulations with you, and above all with Dr. Shaw, upon the stand that New York State has at last taken. Next I wish to say that we now have a right to expect that the United States as a whole will follow New York's example, and therefore pass the Constitutional Amendment at Washington. Third, and what is most important, I wish to speak through you to the women of New York about the heavy responsibilities that now are theirs.

"What we citizens of the democracy who enjoy full political rights need to remember is that we have no moral right to their enjoyment, and that in the long run we will not be permitted to enjoy them, unless we perform the duties necessarily implied in their possession. In this world neither man nor woman has any right to the enjoyment of a privilege unless he or she accepts and fulfills the obligations accompanying it. A democracy that represents merely the enjoyment of privilege is bound in the end to go down. It is only a democracy based on service which can permanently endure.

"As a matter of fact, among the reasons because of which I welcome the extension of suffrage to women is my belief that certain duties in the way of securing social and industrial justice, about which many men are lukewarm, will enlist the support of almost all women. Of course you will have to realize that silly sentimentality may be as bad as brutality. But we must act! And we must act with reasonable rapidity. Take, for example, the milk problem in this city. I am credibly informed that the price of milk has gone so high as to result in the stinting of the amount given to the children of the very poor, with results that have been lamentably shown in their health. For grown-up people, milk and butter are luxuries. For children good milk is a necessity. To try improperly to reduce the price paid farmers for milk inevitably means a reduction in the supply. But I would refuse to permit grown-up people to have milk or butter until provision has been made for supplying every child the milk necessary for its health and welfare. I would take whatever steps are required, whether by legislation, by the establishment of Government markets, or even by still further and more drastic action, if necessary, to accomplish the desired result.

Patriotism Woman's Duty.

"But, women of New York, my fellow-citizens, my fellow-Americans, what I specially wish to call to your attention tonight is the prime duty of the moment, the duty to make patriotism part of your very life of all your actions, and not something merely to be talked about—or with abstract sentimentality. Patriotism is an entirely concrete thing. At this moment this country is at war for its own vital interests, and also for the vital interests of mankind.

"No man or woman is patriotic at this time who does not heartily back the United States Government in every action for the efficient prosecution of the war. In the world as it now is no people can exist unless they are able to defend themselves, no form of Government can permanently endure unless it works efficiently. The way to show true devotion to democracy, the way to make democracy safe, is to make it just, and to make it efficient. Let me illustrate by two examples close at hand. South of us a year ago lay the little Republics of Hayti and Santo Domingo. As far as names went they were as much democratic republics as was this nation. But their people had not developed self-control, self-restraint, the power to secure the doing of justice by and among themselves, or the power to prepare themselves so as to be able to resist foreign aggression. We invaded and conquered these countries, we then ruled over them, because in these two republics democracy worked so badly that injustice prevailed within them, while they were powerless to defend themselves from outside attack.

Must Be Prepared.

"In this country our prime failure has been to develop our strength so as to protect us from outside attack. This is the matter of first consequence to us at this moment. The woman who does not raise her son to be a soldier for the right, and the man who has not been raised to be a soldier for the right, are neither of them fit for citizenship in a free republic. We cannot make democracy safe in this country unless we make this country safe against alien aggression; this means preparedness in advance as our permanent policy; and at this time it means the stern resolution to put through this war until we win the peace of overwhelming victory.

"I believe that, even when temporarily puzzled, temporarily misled, the average of American men and the average of American women have in them the spirit which will make them in the end do what is wise and what is right, and fearlessly face any danger and any hardship rather than submit to wrong. I believe this as much of the women as I do of the men. The women and the men in this country more than in any other great country of the world now stand on a near equality of right and justice, shoulder to shoulder, side by side, mother and son, husband and wife, brother and sister, lover and sweetheart. Thus standing, you and I, friends, we must face every risk and endure every hardship, until we have won the great fight for justice, wherein we have taken our place alongside all the justly acting and liberty loving nations of mankind."

NEW VOTERS TO BACK FEDERAL AMENDMENT

New York Suffrage Party's Program Calls on Women to Maintain Autonomy.

Political reprisal upon candidates who have opposed woman suffrage in the past, a campaign against candidates for Congress and the Legislature who refuse to indorse the Federal suffrage amendment, and a complete reorganization of the party along Congressional district lines, to the end that the votes of New York's women may be made effective in the national amendment drive, were the vital features of the program proposed to the forty-ninth annual convention of the New York State Woman Suffrage Party by the Executive Board at its first open session yesterday afternoon. There was applause for the proposal that the women maintain the autonomy of their own organization and refuse to split their membership among the existing political parties, thus abandoning the suffrage tight for the present. There was much laughter when the board's report called those who are to be punished for past offenses, not only Antis, but men "opposed to the interests of women and children and to humanitarian legislation in general."

Otherwise the program was received in silence by the delegates when presented by Miss Alice Morgan Wright. The seeming indifference on the floor was interpreted by the delegates themselves as meaning that the great majority of delegates were in agreement upon the program and that it would be put through today.

The board's report, in conjunction with the declaration of Mrs. Norman de R. Whitehouse, that the women should "take their army down to Washington and fight the battle for democracy there while the men fight it abroad, answered the question "What will the women do?" The full report of the Executive Committee read:

Suffragists' New Platform.

The Executive Board of the New York State Woman Suffrage Party recommends that:

First—In order to work more effectively for the Federal amendment the campaign district organizations should be abolished and in their place Congressional district organizations should be established. The Congressional district Chairman should be appointed by the elected officers of the New York State Woman Suffrage Party with the consent of the leaders of the Assembly districts which lie in the respective Congressional districts, and the officers of the Congressional districts should be appointed by the Chairman of the Congressional district with the consent of the Assembly district leaders of that Congressional district.

The Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Congressional Districts should be combined with one Chairman and organization, and the Forty-first and Forty-second combined with one Chairman and organization.

Second—The Assembly district organizations with leader and officers, elected by the votes of dues-paying members, should be retained.

The Assembly district organizations should bear the same relation to the organization of the Congressional district in which they lie as they now bear to the campaign district in which they lie.

The suffrage clubs should remain as well as the election district committees.

The New York City organization should retain its present form.

Third—We should remain a non-partisan group of voters. We should not at this convention indorse any principle, party or individual, or commit ourselves to parties or partisan measures before we have had ample time to study conditions and problems of Government which are new to us.

Fourth—We should inform ourselves of various problems of Government in order to use our new power of citizenship to the greatest advantage of State and nation.

We should maintain, therefore, the following committees:

Educational Committee—We recommend that the group known as the educational section reorganize to become a standing committee and undertake to hold lectures on the various forms of government of city, State, and nation; that they investigate the various administrative departments of city and State both as to their powers and duties, and as to the fulfillment of the latter. That they undertake the training of speakers on such matters who may be at the service of the organization throughout the State; that they hold monthly public meetings to report upon their investigations, and that they publish and distribute a correspondence course of civics.

Should Educate Women.

Americanization Committee—Should undertake the civic education of alien women in connection with preparations for their naturalization.

Legislative Committee—We should maintain a Legislative Committee with a representative at Albany during the sessions of the Legislature. The duties of this committee should be especially to watch legislation affecting women and children and the health conditions of the State. It should report upon its investigations at each meeting of the Executive Board. It should have power to recommend to the Central Board legislation which the Central Board may initiate or introduce into the Legislature.

Committee on Labor—The industrial section should be renamed the Committee on Labor, and should report to the Central Board upon the special interests and needs of the women and children in industry.

Intelligence Committee—There should be a committee to investigate and report upon the records of candidates for political office.

Committee on Rural Problems—The section on indorsements should be renamed and should give its attention to the problems of the rural women and undertake, with the consent of the Central Board, work in connection with the Grange.

The publicity, press, and organization departments should be retained. A War Service Committee should be formed to co-operate with the existing agencies to perform such services as we may be called upon by the Government to render.

Fifth—The Central Board should send a monthly communication containing informations and instructions to each Congressional Chairman and Assembly district leader.

Sixth—In view of the likelihood of the immediate submission of the Federal amendment to the State Legislatures for ratification we should campaign against the nomination or election of candidates for the New York State Legislature and campaign against candidates for Congress who will not agree to indorse the Federal amendment, providing the Federal amendment has not passed before the next Congressional election, which takes place in 1918.

Seventh—At the next primaries and election we should campaign against certain candidates for State and Federal offices who have consistently opposed woman suffrage, and whose records show them to have been opposed to the interests of women and children and to humanitarian legislation in general.

Eighth—The board further recommends that:

We, with the additional power of full citizenship, renew our offer of service to the Government in this time of war, and hold ourselves ready to perform any duty which it may designate.

The ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton was crowded with delegates, alternates, and visitors long before the first open session convened at 2 o'clock. The Credential Committee made its preliminary report after Mrs. Whitehouse had called the convention to order and the Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant had delivered the invocation. Mrs. Raymond Brown, Chairman of the Organization Committee, reported next, and the floor was given to Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, the Congressional Chairman, who dwelt upon the work of the Congressional Campaign Committee.

Mrs. Ogden Mills Reid, the party Treasurer, told of the difficulties of raising a campaign fund in the face of unprecedented demands from war charities, patriotic and relief organizations, and said in future campaigns there should be an Assistant Treasurer and a Finance Committee. After Miss Wright had presented her report, Mrs. Whitehouse, the retiring Chairman, read her annual report, and the afternoon session adjourned.

Mrs. Whitehouse Reviews Work.

Mrs. Whitehouse told of the interruption to suffrage work when war was declared, described the confusion attendant upon women's early efforts to serve the Government, and of the resignation of twenty-five pacifist members when the organization pledged itself to war service.

"The forty-eighth convention met a year ago to plan a victory," she began. "The forty-ninth convention meets today to celebrate a victory."

When the cheering was over she reviewed the chronology of the suffrage year including the enfranchising of Russian women, the coming of suffrage in Ontario, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and British Columbia, the promise of action by the French and Italian Parliaments, the success of the Electoral Reform bill in England, "making suffrage assured for English women," and the conferring of Presidential suffrage upon the women of seven States.

She spoke of the handicap of the disapproved pickets' campaign and said the antis adroitly increased the opposition aroused by the pickets with the result that "reproaches of pro-Germanism and disloyalty added to the general feeling of bitterness and disapproval." She said the party "also had to work against the psychological belief that suffrage could not win in New York State."

Mrs. Whitehouse again thanked President Wilson for his help, and thus expressed gratitude for Socialist aid:

"The Socialist candidate for Mayor in this city contributed generously to the cause when he publicly challenged the three other Mayoralty candidates to unite on this one non-partisan issue question and give it their support. Mr. Hillquit's challenge did not obtain the degree of support he asked from the other candidates, but it brought statements from the other candidates that each one was a believer in woman suffrage.

"The Mayoralty situation here worked to our advantage. The bitter fight between the four candidates, the personal attacks, the natural uncertainty of the result undoubtedly prevented any one of the parties from opposing our measure.

"Our greatest duty," she concluded, "is to use our new power in every way to obtain for the women of all our country the full citizenship that we have won for ourselves through such long and hard efforts. Our country sets an example we may follow. It is sending its armies abroad, our husbands, our sons, to fight not for any advantage of its own, but for democracy—for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own government. We may in the same manner take our forces to Washington and there fight pescefully for democracy, for the rights of women who submit to authority in other States to have a voice in their own government. If we make this our first object, we shall be putting promptly to the best advantage—to the service of that same human liberty for which we have worked so long unarmed—our new, our powerful weapon of votes. Let us test our new weapon in the service of our sisters."

CAREW SAYS NO TO WOMEN.

Congressman Definitely Refuses to Vote for Federal Amendment.

Congressman John F. Carew told thirty members of the National Woman's Party who called upon him yesterday at the Wyandotte Club, 232 East Fifty-eighth Street, that he would not vote for the Federal amendment. He represents the district in which Mrs. John Winters Brannan, now serving a sixty-day sentence for picketing the White House, lives, and one of the things the women asked was that he would work to ameliorate the conditions of the imprisoned pickets. To this he did not reply, and the women did not press other questions.

A large number of women who have picketed and have been imprisoned were in the delegation. Mrs. John Rogers, Jr., who headed the delegation, was one; Mrs. Helena Hill Weed of Washington, D. C., and Connecticut, was another; Miss Maude Malone, who served a sixty-day term; Mrs. Thomas Holmes, and Mrs. Ella O. Guilford, who is now out on suspended sentence after the last arrest.

"Mr. Carew," said Mrs. Rogers, who was the speaker of the afternoon, "we want you to ask the President to put his tremendous power behind Congress to get it to pass the Federal amendment, and we want him to put it into his message. The President has told Mrs. Whitehouse that suffrage is a question of national importance and not one to wait, and that no other question should be settled before it. We want you to ask your colleagues to pass this amendment, and to refer it back to the States for ratification. The question should be put out of the way. We also want to speak to you in the interest of Mrs. Brannan, who is serving an unjust sentence.

Mrs. O. H. Havemeyer told Mr. Carew what a splendid triumph it would be for democracy to get the women out of prison and pass the Federal amendment, but Mr. Carew didn't see it that way. "I have never voted for that amendment and I am not going to change my position now," said Mr. Carew.

"Do you want us to come and visit you every day?" asked Mrs. Rogers.

"No," said Mr. Carew, "and if you want me to give you a decided answer now, I will tell you I will not vote for it."

"I have a great deal of respect for you ladies. I have a wife and three daughters and two sons, and I love my wife and daughters best. If I thought proper I would do as you wish. I have voted against the amendment every time I have had the opportunity. The only reason that might make me change my mind is the stand New York State has taken."

Somewhat mollified at this, the women introduced the pickets, shook hands with Mr. Carew, and left, promising another visit.

DE SAULLES CHILD HALTS MURDER TRIAL

Mother Insists Upon Seeing Him and Justice Says She May, but Not in Court.

EIGHT JURORS SELECTED

All Are 50 or Over, and the Fathers of Daughters—Defendant's Mother Taken Ill in Courtroom.

Mrs. Blanca De Saulles, who is being tried for the murder of her divorced husband, John Longer De Saulles, came into the Nassau County courtroom at Mineola, L. I., yesterday morning with her eyes flashing and her lips trembling. She began at once to talk with animation to ex-Judge Lewis J. Smith, one of her lawyers.

The contrast between her apparent excitement yesterday morning and her stony demeanor of the day before awakened interest, and it was learned that she had been aroused again concerning her four-and-a-half-year-old son, for whose sake she had shot De Saulles, according to the defense.

The boy, it was learned, had failed to appear at the prison on Monday afternoon at the close of the trial, when she expected him. By an agreement between counsel for Mrs. De Saulles and for the family of his father, the child, John Longer De Saulles, Jr., has been making visits twice a week to his mother, on Mondays and Thursdays.

No word had been conveyed to Mrs. De Saulles that the boy was not to be permitted to visit her on Monday, and her worry over his absence was heightened, according to her lawyers, by the fact that she was conscious of the possibility that visits to her from him might in the future be few.

Proposed Habeas Corpus.

After the young woman had talked to her counsel, Henry J. Uterhart, her leading representative, started to prepare an application for a writ of habeas corpus to compel the family to have the boy visit his mother. The child is now with the family of Mrs. August Heckscher, an aunt of the late John L. De Saulles, at Huntington, L. I. Before the papers were ready, however, Almuth C. Vandiver, of the firm of O'Gorman, Battle & Vandiver, which is representing Charles A. H. De Saulles, a brother of the dead man, entered a conference with Mr. Uterhart on the subject of the boy's visits. Mr. Uterhart said that he would press the habeas corpus proceedings at once, unless an arrangement for visits from the boy was made which was satisfactory to the mother.

Justice Manning, at the request of the two lawyers, suspended the slow process of getting a jury and went into his chambers to consult regarding the boy. This ended in an agreement that the two visits a week of the boy to his mother should continue during the trial, but they shall not take place in the courtroom. The first of these will take place after the close of court this afternoon.

The boy has not so far appeared in court during the trial. It was learned yesterday that Justice Manning had been very much opposed to having the child in the courtroom. Mrs. De Saulles has also been unwilling to have him near her at the trial, where it might be interpreted that he was being exploited as a feature of the defense. After the agreement as to future visits, Mr. Uterhart said:

"I was surprised to learn that the agreement to bring the boy to visit his mother twice a week had been disregarded, as that agreement was procured previously by a threat to resort to a writ of habeas corpus to prevent the boy from being kept away from his mother. Today I find that they had decided that they were not going to allow the mother to see the boy during the course of the trial. I told Mr. Vandiver to tell Charles De Saulles that if he did not want the boy taken out of his influence by a writ of habeas corpus he had better reconsider. After a conference with the Justice they came to terms."

Didn't Want Boy in Court.

Almuth C. Vandiver said that there was no objection to letting the boy see his mother, but that the trial was not adjourned until 4 P. M., and that it meant keeping the boy out until unreasonably late in the afternoon to let him visit his mother. He said:

"Yesterday the Heckschers, with whom the boy had been staying, were moving into town and on that account could not take the boy to the jail to see the mother. The boy spent one afternoon playing with the Heckscher children. In addition to that it had not been decided whether to allow the boy to visit his mother at all during the trial. Hitherto he had been seeing his mother twice a week from 2:15 to 4 o'clock. It was felt that visits to the mother after court would keep the boy out too late.

"The idea that the boy might visit his mother in court did not meet the approval of Justice Manning, and Mr. Uterhart told me that he did not want the boy in court either. The suggestion to put the matter before Justice Manning and let him decide what should be arranged came from our side. As a matter of fact, it was originally made by ex-Senator James W. O'Gorman. No court order was made, but Justice Manning simply brought us to an agreement. The boy will make visits to his mother on Wednesdays and Fridays during the trial from about 1 o'clock to 3:30."

The fact that Charles A. H. De Saulles is actively aiding the prosecution became known yesterday when he sat in court all day with two lawyers engaged by him on the case. Mr. Vandiver, who has been employed mainly regarding the little De Saulles boy, over whom Charles A. H. De Saulles has been seeking to obtain the guardianship, has had no part in the prosecution.

But Mr. De Saulles has been represented on the staff of the prosecution by Deavon Murphy, who was attached to the Homicide Bureau in the District Attorney's office under Governor Whitman. Mr. Murphy took a large part in the prosecution of Hans Schmidt, who was executed for murder, and in other important criminal prosecutions.

Mr. Murphy Aids Prosecution.

George Gordon Battle, who was originally employed by Charles A. H. De Saulles to defend the name of the late prosecution of Mrs. De Saulles. Mr. after the murder that he was engaged solely to defend the memory of the dead man, and was not interested in the prosecution of Mrs. de Saulles. Mr. Vandiver, a partner of Mr. Battle, said yesterday that the instructions to lawyers for Mr. De Saulles were not confined to the work of excluding from the trial or of combating attacks on the name of the late John Longer De Saulles. He said:

"Mr. Murphy has been engaged to assist the prosecution in every way possible. He has offered to do everything in his power to help District Attorney Weekes. There have been many points of the case to be looked up in New York, and Mr. Murphy has worked on them. We do not anticipate any attack on the memory of Mr. De Saulles, and we know that none can be successfully made."

The association of Mr. Murphy with the prosecution was brought forward by the defense as prominently as possible in the examination of jurors. Mr. Uterhart asked this question of every one of the talesmen examined:

"Are you acquainted with Deacon Murphy, formerly of the Homicide Bureau of the District Attorney's office in New York and now representing the family of the late Mr. De Saulles in the prosecution of this case?"

Jurors came slowly again yesterday. Several men were excused because they confessed prejudice in favor of the defendant due to reading of the case, while the majority were dismissed after peremptory challenges by the defense. Only four were chosen out of thirty talesmen called, leaving eight men in the jury box at the end of the day.

Mme. Vergara-Errazuriz, mother of Mrs. Blanca De Saulles, was present in the courtroom yesterday until the excitement of trial overcame her and produced a heart attack, which caused her to leave. She spent an hour in another room in the building, and when her strength returned she visited her daughter, who was by this time in her room again in the Sheriff's quarters in the Mineola jail.

Mme. Vergara-Errazuriz came to this country from Chile on the first steamer leaving Santiago after news that her daughter had killed De Saulles was cabled to her. Because of illness she did not attend the first day's trial, but she insisted on coming yesterday in spite of her physical condition.

Mother Is Self-Possessed.

Mme. Vergara-Errazuriz came into the courtroom accompanied by a Chilean Consular officer at this port and her son, William, and her daughter, Amalice. Unlike Mrs. De Saulles, who is extremely emaciated and white, the mother is fairly plump, with a touch of color in her cheeks. A striking resemblance runs through the family. Though the sister Amalice is in good health, she looks enough like Mrs. De Saulles to be a twin sister. Sitting but a few feet in the rear of the defendant, she has occasionally been mistaken for the defendant.

All members of the family have the characteristic of a calmness, bordering on stolidity, which has been so strikingly exhibited by Mrs. De Saulles. The mother, sister, and brother sat looking straight ahead, without the movement of a muscle on any of the three faces. No change of expression ever betrayed the fact if any of the questions on the juror's attitude toward the death penalty, on his readiness to punish a woman as quickly as a man, or other subjects produced the slightest emotional reaction in either of them. When Mme. Vergara-Errazuriz was seized with a heart attack, she spoke to her escort and walked slowly out of the room with him. She moved away so quietly that it did not become known that she was ill until her absence was noticed later.

After she had learned that the boy was to visit her again, Mrs. De Saulles appeared to lose interest again and gazed on apathetically while strings of complex questions were presented to the talesmen. Because the type of defense on the grounds of insanity, which is relied on to acquit Mrs. De Saulles, several unusual problems for a juror are raised.

Near the close of the session Justice Manning made a vigorous complaint against the procedure of the defense in taking talesman after talesman through the entire labyrinth and then regularly using the peremptory challenge against them. He said:

"I don't see the use of pursuing this course at extreme length of time, and then exercising the peremptory challenge. It is a mere waste of time."

The next man was quickly chosen. He was the eighth juror. The increased speed that followed the Justice's admonition indicated that the selection of the jury might be completed in this morning's section of court.

While the defense has not revealed the principle on which it has been selecting jurors, the general plan is pretty well outlined by the statistics of the domestic life of the eight jurors who have been accepted. Every one is of middle age or past, the youngest being 49 years old. All have one or more children. Each has at least one daughter.

All talesmen were carefully examined as to the size and make-up of their families. At the morning session the defense by peremptory challenge rejected in succession three talesmen, evidently suited in all other respects for the purposes of the defense, but disqualified by the fact that they had but one child each, and that a son. The theory evidently was that a father of boys, in deliberating on the case, might think of the slain John L. De Saulles, while the father of daughters would dwell more on the thought of the young woman whose life was at stake.

William A. Seaman of Woodmere, a painting contractor, confessed at first that he had both scruples against capital punishment and an impression on the case, which the prosecution assumed to be in favor of Mrs. De Saulles. Nevertheless, the prosecution passed him. But the defense, on learning that he had been married only four months, dropped him precipitately.

The prosecution's main reason for rejecting jurors was their confession of bias due to reading of the case. John J. Dowd of Sea Cliff answered several questions satisfactorily, but when asked if he had read of the case said:

"Yes, ever since Aug. 3."

"Oh, you even know the date of the killing," said District Attorney Weeks.

"Yes," replied the witness. Mr. Weeks asked if his close attention to the case had made an impression on him which it would require evidence to remove.

"Yes, and strong evidence," said Dowd.

The first juror accepted yesterday was William P. Jones, a real estate dealer of Freeport. He is 61 years old, married, and has a family. He satisfied the defense by saying that he had no prejudice against the defense of insanity, if it was properly established, and would not draw a conclusion unfavorable to the young woman because she carried a revolver without a license on the night of the shooting.

The next juror was John A. Ellard, 50 years old, of Oyster Bay, a builder. He has one married daughter. The first two were selected at the morning session. The two additional obtained in the afternoon were Herman H. Beers of Freeport, a retired cigar manufacturer, with a family, and ex-State Commissioner of Fairs William H. Jones of Oyster Bay, who is also past 60 and has daughters.

Jurors rejected besides those mentioned were Frank E. Baldwin of Montauk, Nicholas J. King of New Hyde Park, Charles L. Cochs of Port Washington, Allen E. Moore of Central Park, David Bandler of Carle Park, John D. Gardiner of Baldwins, Thomas K. Box of Baldwins, Carl Koehler of Rockville Centre, Eugene P. Hawkins of Rockville Centre, Samuel Combs of Woodmere, John Hannan of Franklin Square, Orson C. Foster of Oceanside, Martin W. Watts of Woodmere, James M. McQueen, Jacob Post of Freeport, Royal Mollneux of Hempstead, Thomas A. Maloney of Great Neck Station, Irving Smith of Rockville Centre, Melvin S. Terry of Freeport.

The trial will be resumed at 10 o'clock this morning.

QUESTIONS SWEENEY ABOUT ARMY BAZAAR

Campaign Director' Appears at Prosecutor's Office in Inquiry Concerning Fete.

DOWLING URGES REFORM

Introduces Ordinance Giving the City Control of Benefit Entertainments for Charity.

District Attorney Swann's investigation into the disposal of the funds collected at the recent Army and Navy Bazaar centred closely yesterday around the activities of George F. Sweeney, the "advertising publicity and campaign director." Mr. Sweeney was called before the District Attorney to explain some of his accounts. Before his arrival, however, Mr. Swann had obtained about fifty checks, which, according to the prosecutor, showed that Sweeney, within a period of a month before the bazaar, during its progress and after it closed, had drawn upon the Union Trust Company, where he had an account, for $20,134.83.

Among the vouchers were checks which ran as high as $5,000, drawn to "Cash." The bazaar was held from Oct. 27 to Nov. 3. The checks drawn by Sweeney on the Union Trust Company to "Cash" from Oct. 17 to Nov. 17, it is asserted, aggregated a total of $12,290. Many checks of substantial amounts were drawn to some of the solicitors, according to the District Attorney's office, whom Mr. Sweeney employed to assist him in his work, which, according to a letterhead obtained by the District Attorney, was that of a "campaign director," specializing in the publicity and financial organization of "national, local, and special campaigns."

Directors of the Christmas festival which the National League for Woman's service will stage the week of Dec. 22 to 29 for the benefit of the children of United States soldiers and sailors announced yesterday that Mr. Sweeney would not handle the advertising matter for the program and had canceled his contract.

Isabelle H. Hardie, Secretary of the National Special Aid Society of 230 Fifth Avenue also said Mr. Sweeney was no longer Executive Secretary of that organization, and said he had received no salary since Oct. 21.

Detectives yesterday said they found evidence that Sweeney's name was taken from [illegible] of his office at 303 Fifth Avenue and the telephones were removed.

According to District Attorney Swann, Sweeney, when he appeared at the office, said little in connection with his affairs. It was not until he had left the office that the District Attorney decided to question him with reference to the vouchers, but Sweeney could not be found.

On the advice of District Attorney Swann, Edward S. Moore, Assistant Secretary of the Title Guarantee Trust Company and Treasurer of the bazaar, sent a letter to Sweeney yesterday calling upon him to turn over all the collections received by his solicitors, which were free contributions, and not intended as payment for advertising space in the program. According to the accounts in the possession of the District Attorney's office, these collections aggregate more than $6,000.

Some evidence obtained by Mr. Swann was presented to the Grand Jury yesterday.

Frank L. Dowling, President of the Board of Aldermen, introduced an ordinance at the meeting of the board yesterday to give the city jurisdiction over war charities and other benefit entertainments, with the exception of such affairs conducted by lodges and religious organizations. There will be a public hearing on the ordinance at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon in the Aldermanic Chamber.
